

VIRGINIA:

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE CITY OF VIRGINIA BEACH

In re: A Court of Mist and Fury

Case No. CL22-1984

Prince Books, Read Books, One More Page Books, bbgb tales for kids, American Booksellers for Free Expression, Association of American Publishers, Inc., Authors Guild, Inc., American Library Association, Virginia Library Association, and Freedom to Read Foundation’s Motion to Dismiss and to Vacate Order to Show Cause

On the grounds enumerated below, Movants, by counsel, present their arguments why this Court should dismiss the Petition for Declaration for Adjudication of Obsenity [sic] (“Petition”) filed April 28, 2022, and to vacate the Order to Show Cause Pursuant to 18.2-384 of the Code of Virginia (“Order”) dated May 18, 2022; or, in the alternative, move to dismiss the Petition and the Order.

1. This case constitutes a misuse of Section 18.2-384 of the Code of Virginia (“the Law”), which additionally has severe facial constitutional problems.

2. The Law does not authorize this proceeding because it limits any proceeding to “adjudication of the obscenity of the book” as to adults under Virginia Code § 18.2-372. See Va. Code § 18.2-384(A); see also id. § 18.2-384(K) (establishing presumption of knowledge that book is “obscene” under statutes governing obscenity for adults and child pornography only). It does not provide the Court with jurisdiction to adjudicate whether a book is harmful to (or obscene for) minors. See Va. Code. § 18.2-390 (separately defining materials that are “harmful to juveniles”). Both the Petition and the Order—which focus on the book’s “obscenity for unrestricted viewing by minors”—thus exceeded the scope of the Law.

3. A Court of Mist and Fury is not obscene taken as a whole, as will be established by the facts should this case proceed past the jurisdictional stage—and as is demonstrated now by the fact that Petitioner did not ask that it be found to be such. See Petition ¶ 7. Nor did the Order find probable cause that it is, instead focusing on its “obscen[ity] for unrestricted viewing by minors.” See Order 1.¹

4. Even if these proceedings were authorized by Section 18.2-384, the statute is unconstitutional both on its face and as applied to the facts of this case.

5. First, the Law conflicts with the constitutional test for obscenity. See Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973). Several of the evidentiary categories listed in § 18.2-384(H) have no relevance to the Miller test. See, e.g., Va. Code Ann. § 18.2-384(H)(2) (considering “[t]he degree of [local] public acceptance of the book” rather than whether “the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find that the work as a whole appeals to the prurient interest,” Miller, 413 U.S. at 24 (internal quotation marks omitted)).

5. Second, the authority that the Law vests in one court to enjoin the sale, publication, and distribution of a book across the state—whether through a temporary restraining order (“TRO”) issued pursuant to Va. Code. § 18.2-384(E), or by imputing knowledge of the book’s obscenity, pursuant to § 18.2-384(K), to all who publish, sell, lend, or transport the book, even if they are not parties to the proceeding, following a final adjudication—is unconstitutional.

6. The Law unconstitutionally allows a “circuit court in [the] city or county” where an obscenity proceeding is initiated to bind all persons in the state from publishing or even lending the challenged book. This is of particular concern to Movants—who include bookstores located throughout Virginia—because Virginia applies local, not statewide, community standards to determine obscenity. Price v. Commonwealth, 214 Va. 490, 491–92 (1974). This means that a book can be legally obscene in one community and not in another—yet under the Law a finding of obscenity in one Virginia community will suffice to bind retailers and publishers in all Virginia communities, including ones where the book would likely not be held obscene.

7. Of equally acute concern to Movants, after the issuance of a TRO or a final adjudication of obscenity, the Law provides that everyone in the state who “publishes, sells, rents, lends, transports, . . . or commercially distributes or exhibits the book” is deemed to know that the book is obscene. See Va. Code Ann. § 18.2-384(E). This would reach all booksellers, publishers, and other retailers working in the state—including many persons who had no previous knowledge of or connection to the matter. And even those who learn of the matter may have been unable to appear in the matter because the deadline for participation by non-parties pursuant to the Law is unclear. See id. § 18.2-384(F).

8. Relatedly, many publishers, booksellers, and other distributors governed by the court's order likely will not know about any TRO or order resulting from the show cause hearing. The Law requires that, when an action is initiated, any petition must "list[] the names and addresses, if known, of the author, publisher, and all other persons interested in [the material's] sale or commercial distribution." Id. § 18.2-384(B)(3) (emphasis added). This means that publishers, distributors, and booksellers may receive no notice if the petitioner is not aware of their names and addresses—and the Law also fails to define "other [interested] persons." Similarly, pursuant to the Law, a court may issue a TRO against distribution of an allegedly obscene book "upon . . . notice to be given to the persons and in the manner prescribed by the court." Id. § 18.2-384(E). In addition to being unconstitutionally vague, this appears to allow the court to bind many persons who had no previous connection to or notice of a proceeding. While Movants have learned of this proceeding, many others impacted by it—and who would be governed by a TRO—do not know about this proceeding and are not before this Court.

9. In addition, it is not clear that such parties could appeal the obscenity judgment in the proceeding against the book, or whether they could relitigate the issue of the book’s obscenity in a different matter, including any future criminal prosecution brought against them. See id. § 18.2-384(L) (allowing only “part[ies] to the proceeding . . . [to] appeal from the judgment”). If, as appears to be the case from the face of the Law, they may not, the Law creates unconstitutional strict liability for speech. Smith v. California, 361 US 147, 153 (1959). Critically, this would also hold for individuals located outside of the community where the proceeding against the book occurred—and, accordingly, as noted above, where the community standards governing obscenity may differ such that the book is not, in fact, obscene in their locale.

10. Finally, the Law also imposes an unconstitutional prior restraint because it authorizes the Court to issue a TRO not only without notice to all parties governed by the order, but also without requiring an adverse hearing and without an ultimate judicial determination that the book is obscene. See, e.g., Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 316–17 (1980), reh’g denied, 446 U.S. 947 (1980).

While the book in question is clearly not obscene, the deficiencies in Petitioners’ pleadings and the Court’s Order, as well as the unconstitutional nature of the Law, mean that the Court can and should resolve this case without any need to reach the merits of the claim. Should the Court determine otherwise, Movants intend to introduce evidence and argument demonstrating that the books in question are clearly not obscene.
