INTRODUCTION

The right to vote is “of the most fundamental significance under our constitutional structure.” No Labels Party of Ariz. v. Fontes, 142 F.4th 1226, 1231 (9th Cir. 2025). It is “preservative of all other rights” because it serves as a check against tyrannical rule while simultaneously ensuring the competition of ideas amongst our elected officials. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 370 (1886).

It is in this light that Congress has repeatedly legislated to protect the franchise, including through the National Voter Registration Act (“NVRA”), 52 U.S.C. § 20501 et seq., the Help America Vote Act (“HAVA”), 52 U.S.C. § 20901 et seq., and the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (“CRA”), 52 U.S.C. § 20701 et seq. These statutes were all passed for the express purpose of ensuring that eligible Americans—especially racial minorities and voters with disabilities—have the opportunity to participate in free, fair, and secure elections. Congress designed the NVRA to limit “discriminatory and unfair registration laws and procedures” that restrict voter participation, particularly among racial minorities. 52 U.S.C. § 20501(a)(3). Similarly, HAVA was designed to help Americans vote by investing in election administration that would improve “accessibility and quantity of polling places” for those with disabilities and limited English proficiency. 52 U.S.C. § 20901(b)(1)(G). And the Department of Justice (“DOJ”) itself explains that Title III of the CRA, its election records provision, was designed to “secure a more effective protection of the right to vote.” U.S. Dep’t of Justice, C.R. Div., Federal Law Constraints on Post-Election “Audits” (Jul. 28, 2021), <https://perma.cc/74CP-58EH> (citing Alabama ex rel. Gallion v. Rogers, 187 F. Supp. 848, 853 (M.D. Ala. 1960) and H.R. Rep. No. 86-956 (1959)).

The United States’ demand for Oregon’s unredacted voter file—which contains sensitive personal information such as birth dates, driver’s license numbers, and Social Security numbers

[PROPOSED] Amici Curiae Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

from every voter in the state—undermines these statutes’ core purposes and is contrary to law. To be sure, the public disclosure of state voting records is important to ensure transparency and the accuracy of the voter rolls, especially by ensuring that citizens are not erroneously removed from the voter records. Yet releasing the State’s voter records without redaction and for purposes afield from protecting voter access would deter voter participation and undermine the right to vote. It would also compel the Oregon Secretary of State to violate Oregon’s privacy law. As many courts have found, redacting sensitive personal information when releasing state voting records is essential to strike a balance between guaranteeing transparency in elections while also ensuring that voters have the assurance of confidentiality that they need to exercise their fundamental right to vote.

INTERESTS OF AMICI CURIAE

The American Civil Liberties Union is a nationwide, nonprofit organization that, since 1920, has sought to protect the civil liberties of all Americans, with 54 affiliates across the United States. The ACLU of Oregon (“ACLU-OR”) is the Oregon affiliate. ACLU-OR has previously appeared in this Court, as both counsel and amicus, in cases raising significant questions about the meaning of the Constitution, its limitations on government power, and the breadth of rights it grants. ACLU-OR is committed to advancing civil liberties and civil rights for a more just, equitable, and caring democracy in Oregon. With nearly 50,000 members and donor-supporters across the state, ACLU-OR seeks to protect Oregon voters whose rights would be infringed by the relief sought by the Plaintiff.

Founded in 1920, the League of Women Voters of Oregon (“LWVOR”) is a nonpartisan, non-profit, grassroots, membership organization committed to protecting the right to vote and promoting participation in the democratic process and civic engagement for all eligible people.

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

LWVOR is the Oregon affiliate of the League of Women Voters, which was also founded in 1920 as an outgrowth of the struggle for women's right to vote. To further this mission, LWVOR's over 1,500 members engage in voter registration drives, host candidate forums, conduct numerous voter education activities and issue studies, and take positions relating to voters' rights, including privacy and data security. For over 100 years, LWVOR has been a consistent supporter of voters' rights, election security, and Oregonians' right to privacy. Recent advocacy for election privacy includes testimony in support of Oregon House Bill 4144 in February of 2022, Oregon Senate Bill 293 in March of 2021, Oregon House Bill 3464 in July 2017, and a year-long Privacy and Cyber Security Study and Position published in 2020. Additionally, LWVOR has recently advocated for legislation in support of voting rights and expansion of voting access through testimony on Oregon Senate Bill 210 in March 2025, Oregon House Bill 166 in March 2023, Oregon Senate Bill 576 in January 2023, Oregon House Bill 2004 in March of 2023, and an Elections Methods Study and Informational Update in June 2023. Also, LWVOR presented testimony in March 2025 in opposition to Senate Bill 210, legislation that would have harmed voter access. As amicus, LWVOR seeks to protect Oregon voters' privacy and ensure that Plaintiff's unlawful requests do not chill voter engagement and participation in the political process.

Amici urge the Court to strike the required balance between transparency and voter privacy by dismissing the Complaint, which will allow the State to produce the appropriately redacted voter file.

ARGUMENT

I. THE UNITED STATES' DEMANDS EXCEED STATUTORY AUTHORITY AND ARE CONTRARY TO LAW.

The United States' demand for Oregon's full and unredacted electronic voter file exceeds its statutory authority. Each of the relevant statutes strikes the required constitutional balance between interests in transparency and the protection of individual citizens' right to vote. Likewise, they reflect the constitutional structure that places authority over elections in the hands of the states in the first instance. The NVRA allows for redactions to harmonize transparency in elections and Oregon citizens' right to vote. The CRA's disclosure clause requires that the federal government provide a sufficient statement of the basis and the purpose for any request for records, which Plaintiff fails to provide. Finally, HAVA contains no subpoena authority or records request provision at all. Nothing in these statutes justifies the government's demands for sensitive personal information of voters.

A. The NVRA Allows for Redactions to Uphold the Fundamental Right to Vote and Harmonize State Privacy Laws.

Section 8(i) of the NVRA requires states to provide “all records concerning the implementation of programs and activities conducted for the purpose of ensuring the accuracy and currency of official lists of eligible voters” upon request. 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i). Anyone—including individual voters, groups that protect the right to vote, and government officials—has the same right to records under the NVRA. Voting rights advocates have consistently relied on the NVRA to investigate infringements on the right to vote, including whether election officials have improperly denied or cancelled voter registrations. See, e.g., Project Vote/Voting for Am., Inc. v. Long, 682 F.3d 331, 333 (4th Cir. 2012) (nonprofit investigating improper rejection of voter registrations submitted by students at a historically Black university).

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

However, the information required to be disclosed under the NVRA has limits. Courts have consistently permitted—and in some instances required—states to redact sensitive personal data when disclosing information under the NVRA. Failure to do so can violate the fundamental right to vote protected by the Constitution.

1. Courts consistently permit or require redaction under the NVRA.

Given that the NVRA is silent as to how sensitive personal information should be treated during disclosure, 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i)(1), the Court must interpret the statute in a manner that does not unconstitutionally burden the right to vote. Federal courts throughout the country have consistently struck this balance, interpreting the “all records concerning” language in Section 8(i) to permit—and even in some cases require—redaction and the protection of confidential materials. As the First Circuit has noted, “nothing in the text of the NVRA prohibits the appropriate redaction of uniquely or highly sensitive personal information in the Voter File,” and as such, “the proper redaction of certain personal information in the Voter File can further assuage the potential privacy risks implicated by the public release of the Voter File.” Pub. Int. Legal Found., Inc. v. Bellows, 92 F.4th 36, 56 (1st Cir. 2024); see also Pub. Int. Legal Found., Inc. v. N.C. State Bd. of Elections, 996 F.3d 257, 266-68 (4th Cir. 2021) (holding that the potential connection to ongoing criminal investigations and the possibility of erroneously labeling a voter as a noncitizen and subjecting them to public harassment warrants maintaining confidentiality of records). Other courts have consistently recognized that the NVRA disclosure provisions do not compel the release of sensitive information that is otherwise protected by federal or state laws, such as Oregon’s privacy law that is applicable here. See, e.g., N.C. State Bd. of Elections, 996 F.3d at 264; Pub. Int. Legal Found., Inc. v. Dahlstrom, 673 F. Supp. 3d 1004, 1015–16 (D. Alaska 2023); Pub. Int. Legal Found., Inc. v. Matthews, 589 F. Supp. 3d 932, 942 (C.D. Ill. 2022), clarified on denial of reconsideration, No.

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

20-CV-3190, 2022 WL 1174099 (C.D. Ill. Apr. 20, 2022); Pub. Int. Legal Found. v. Boockvar, 431 F. Supp. 3d 553, 561–63 (M.D. Pa. 2019); Project Vote, Inc. v. Kemp, 208 F. Supp. 3d 1320, 1344–45 (N.D. Ga. 2016).

Indeed, the Fourth Circuit has found that redaction may be affirmatively required to the extent the disclosure of such sensitive material would “create[] an intolerable burden on [the constitutional right to vote] as protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.” Long, 682 F.3d at 339 (citing Greidinger v. Davis, 988 F.2d 1344 (4th Cir. 1993)). The Court in Long, even while granting access to a state’s voter registration applications for inspection and photocopying, ensured the redaction of Social Security numbers, which it found are “uniquely sensitive and vulnerable to abuse.” Id. In coming to this conclusion, the Court emphasized that the NVRA reflected Congress’s view that the right to vote was “fundamental,” and that the unredacted release of records risked deterring citizens from registering to vote and thus created an “intolerable burden” on this fundamental right. Id. at 334, 339. As such, the public disclosure provisions of the NVRA must be interpreted to avoid this unconstitutional burden. See id.; Bellows, 92 F.4th at 56.

Plaintiff itself has itself stated—on multiple occasions, and as recently as last year—that the NVRA does not prohibit the States from redacting “uniquely sensitive information” when disclosing voting records. See, e.g., Br. for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Pub. Int. Legal Found., Inc. v. Bellows (“United States Amicus Brief”), No. 23-1361 (1st Cir. July 25, 2023), 2023 WL 4882397 at *27–28; Br. for the United States as Amicus Curiae at 28, Pub. Int. Legal Found. v. Schmidt, No. 23-1590 (3d Cir. Nov. 6, 2023), <https://perma.cc/3BQ9-36UJ> (“States may redact certain information before disclosing Section 8(i) records.”).

As with any requester of records under the NVRA, the United States should be afforded access to the voting records contemplated under Section 8(i) of the NVRA. But federal court

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

precedent is clear that this access is not unfettered and instead must always be balanced against privacy protections that are vital to ensuring citizens retain their fundamental right to vote.

2. The NVRA does not preempt Oregon law.

Contrary to the United States’ about-face on this issue, there is no conflict between the NVRA and Oregon’s privacy law. Federal laws like the NVRA preempt state election laws only when there is an actual conflict, such that the two sets of law cannot be read consistently with one another. Arizona v. Inter Tribal Council of Ariz., Inc., 570 U.S. 1, 9 (2013) (holding that the NVRA preempts state election law insofar as the two are inconsistent). Nothing in the NVRA requires that disclosed records be unredacted and/or include sensitive personal information like Social Security numbers, dates of birth, or driver’s license numbers. The NVRA does not address how sensitive personal information be treated when disclosing records, 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i)(1), but an Oregon statute mandates that certain sensitive voter information is “not subject to inspection as a public record,” and “may not be disclosed by the Secretary of State or a county clerk.” Or. Rev. Stat. § 247.948(2); see also generally Oklahoma v. Castro-Huerta, 597 U.S. 629, 642 (2022) (“The Supremacy Clause cannot be deployed to elevate abstract and unenacted legislative desires above state law.”) (internal quotation marks omitted). As noted supra, Oregon’s privacy law is on all fours with the governing federal case law, which has both consistently found that redactions are appropriate to accommodate and harmonize state privacy laws while disclosing required documents under the NVRA, see, e.g., Kemp, 208 F. Supp. 3d at 1344–45, and that redactions and preserving confidential information may even be required to protect the constitutional right to vote, see, e.g., Long, 632 F.3d at 339; Bellows, 92 F.4th at 56.

Here, Plaintiff alleges that the information it seeks is “necessary for the Attorney General to determine if Oregon is” complying with section 20507(a)(4). Compl. ¶ 68 (Dkt. 1). But it does not allege why the extensive personal information—in addition to the information that the State has already offered to produce—is necessary to determine whether Oregon has made a reasonable effort to remove ineligible voters by reason of death or change in residence. That explanation is critical given that the NVRA mandates only a “reasonable effort” in conducting list maintenance, 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4), not that specific individual voters must be removed from Oregon voter lists.

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

Oregon’s privacy law and the NVRA should be read as part of a “single procedural scheme.” Gonzalez v. Arizona, 677 F.3d 383, 394 (9th Cir. 2012). If Plaintiff is permitted to engineer a false conflict between the two, it will force the Secretary of State to violate Oregon law and potentially the federal Constitution, all while exceeding both the purpose of and statutory authority provided by the NVRA. See United States Amicus Brief, 2023 WL 4882397 at *27–28 (arguing Section 20507(i) does not compel production of unredacted social security numbers and driver’s license numbers as state limits on voter information are not preempted when they impact uses that “would not further the NVRA’s purposes”).

B. The United States’ Claim Under the CRA Fails.

Congress enacted the public records provisions in Title III of the CRA to facilitate investigations of civil rights violations preventing eligible citizens from voting due to discrimination. H.R. Rep. No. 86-956 at 7 (1959) (indicating “the purpose of Title III is to provide a more effective protection of the right of all qualified citizens to vote without discrimination on account of race”). Yet, as under the NVRA, the Attorney General’s access to these records is not unbounded. If the Attorney General makes a demand for records, she must provide “a statement of the basis and the purpose therefor.” 52 U.S.C. § 20703.

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

Plaintiff’s request here is contrary to the CRA for at least two distinct reasons. First, the United States fails to offer a statutorily sufficient statement in support of its records requests because it provides no basis to conclude that unredacted records are needed to undertake an assessment of Oregon’s compliance with the list maintenance provisions of the NVRA or HAVA. Second, to the extent Plaintiff is entitled to any records under the CRA, those records must similarly be redacted—as they must be for requests under the NVRA—to vindicate the privacy and constitutional rights of Oregon voters.

1. Plaintiff’s demand for records fails to meet the requisite statutory requirements.

Plaintiff’s requests to Oregon fail to provide “a statement of the basis and the purpose,” 52 U.S.C. § 20703, sufficient to support disclosure of the unredacted voter file. The United States alleges that the “purpose of [its] request” to the state seeking “an electronic copy of Oregon’s complete and current VRL” was to “ascertain Oregon’s compliance with the list maintenance requirements of the NVRA and HAVA.” Compl. ¶ 51. Neither the Complaint nor the DOJ letter that invoked Title III supply a sufficient basis or purpose for supporting the records request.

“Basis” and “purpose” under Title III have consistently been treated as distinct concepts. Kennedy v. Lynd, 306 F.2d 222, 229 n.6 (5th Cir. 1962) (showing that basis was the underlying information providing the grounds for the complaint); In re Coleman, 208 F. Supp. 199, 199–200 (S.D. Miss. 1962) (same), aff’d sub nom., Coleman v. Kennedy, 313 F.2d 867 (5th Cir. 1963). The United States’ failure to articulate both a sufficient basis and purpose underlying its request for the unredacted voter file is enough to invalidate the CRA claim. Contemporaneous case law immediately following the enactment of Title III shows that “basis” is the statement for why the Attorney General believes there is a violation of federal civil rights law and the “purpose” explains how the requested records would help determine if there is a violation of the law. Lynd, 306 F.2d at 229 n.6. The basis and purpose requirements under the CRA are critical safeguards, so that the statute cannot be used as a fishing expedition to obtain records for either speculative or unrelated reasons. The statutory basis and purpose requirements are not perfunctory but require a specific statement as to reason for requesting the information and how that information will aid in the investigatory analysis.

In the context of administrative subpoenas, an analogous power by which federal agencies obtain records in service of investigations, courts have found that the test of judicial enforcement of such subpoenas includes an evaluation of whether the investigation is “conducted pursuant to a legitimate purpose,” Lynn v. Biderman, 536 F.2d 820, 824 (9th Cir. 1976) (citing United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48, 57 (1964)), and that such subpoenas “may not be so broad so as to be in the nature of a ‘fishing expedition,’” Peters v. United States, 853 F.2d 692, 700 (9th Cir. 1988). Indeed, courts have explained that such a purpose requirement ensures that the information sought is relevant to the inquiry and not unduly burdensome. See, e.g., F.D.I.C. v. Wentz, 55 F.3d 905, 908 (3d Cir. 1995) (reciting requirements for investigation pursuant to an administrative subpoena). As such, even if some portion of the voter file were necessary to investigate “Oregon’s compliance with the list maintenance requirements of the NVRA and HAVA,” Compl. ¶ 51, the United States has provided an insufficient basis to support the assertion that the full unredacted voter file is necessary to carry out this purpose.

Plaintiff has provided no basis why it believes Oregon’s list maintenance procedures violate the NVRA or HAVA. But even assuming that enforcement of the NVRA and HAVA is a proper “basis” for the demand, nowhere in the Complaint does the United States explain the “purpose” of seeking the unredacted information here. It does not attempt to explain why

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

unredacted voter files are necessary to determine whether Oregon has undertaken a “reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters,” 52 U.S.C. § 20507(a)(4), likely because those files are not in fact necessary. A single snapshot of a state’s voter list does not provide enough information to determine if the state has made a “reasonable effort” to remove ineligible voters. The NVRA and HAVA both leave the mechanisms for conducting list maintenance within the discretion of the State. See id. § 20507(a)(4); (c)(1); § 21083(a)(2)(A). The procedures carried out by a state or locality establish its compliance; the unredacted voter file does not. Even were Plaintiff to identify voters who had moved or died on Oregon’s voter list, it does not explain how this would amount to Oregon failing to comply with the reasonable efforts required by the NVRA or HAVA. See, e.g., Pub. Int. Legal Found. v. Benson, 136 F.4th 613, 624–27 (6th Cir. 2025). Plaintiff’s invocation of Title III of the CRA does not provide a sufficient “statement of the basis and the purpose therefor,” and thus does not comply with the CRA.

2. Any records disclosed under the CRA should be redacted to protect the constitutional rights of the voter

Even had the United States provided a valid basis and purpose sufficient to support its demands—which it did not—any sensitive personal voter information would still be subject to redaction. Just like the NVRA, the text of Title III does not prohibit redactions to ensure compliance with both state law and the Constitution. See supra Part A; Long, 682 F.3d at 339; Bellows, 92 F.4th at 56. The same privacy and constitutional concerns that federal courts have found warrant redactions under NVRA records request apply equally to requests for the same records under the CRA. Cf. Sheetz v. Cnty. of El Dorado, 601 U.S. 267, 281–82 (2024) (Gorsuch, J., concurring) (“[O]ur Constitution deals in substance, not form. However the government chooses to act . . . it must follow the same constitutional rules.”). Thus, even were Plaintiff entitled to records under Title III, the birth month and day, Social Security number, driver’s license number, and voter signature should similarly be redacted. No matter the statutory mechanism, conditioning the right to vote on the release of voters’ sensitive private information “creates an intolerable burden on that right.” Long, 682 F.3d at 339.

[PROPOSED] Amicus Brief of American Civil Liberties
Union of Oregon and League of Women Voters of Oregon

C. HAVA Does Not Provide for Data Disclosures.

Unlike the NVRA and CRA, HAVA does not have a disclosure provision. Compare 52 U.S.C. § 20507(i)(1) (NVRA requiring states to make certain voting records available for public inspection), and 52 U.S.C. § 20703 (CRA authorizing the Attorney General to inspect, reproduce, or copy election records for enforcement purposes), with 52 U.S.C. § 20901 et seq. (HAVA containing no comparable provision). This alone ends the inquiry: Oregon cannot be legally required to disclose records pursuant to a statute that does not authorize the disclosure of the records Plaintiff demands.

The United States nonetheless contends that the mere existence of HAVA’s civil enforcement mechanism allows for unredacted access to all of Oregon’s voting records. Compl. ¶ 70; see 52 U.S.C. § 21111 (permitting the Attorney General to enforce “the uniform and nondiscriminatory election technology and administration requirements under sections 21081, 21082, 21083 [Section 303], and 21083a.”). Not so. HAVA does not provide authority to access state records. Rather, 52 U.S.C. § 21111 merely provides the Attorney General with the authority to bring a civil action to ensure that a state has implemented a HAVA-complaint system. And none of the personal identifiers that Plaintiff seeks are necessary to ensure that Oregon’s system complies with HAVA. Indeed, the fact that other voting-related statutes that also include civil enforcement mechanisms, such as the NVRA and the CRA, contain records provisions when HAVA does not underscores the point that HAVA does not provide Plaintiff with its claimed authority. See, e.g., Gonzalez v. Herrera, 151 F.4th 1076, 1084 (9th Cir. 2025) (courts “must assume ‘that Congress acts intentionally when it omits language included elsewhere’”).

CONCLUSION

In exercising its legislative authority in enacting elections laws, Congress has struck a careful balance between transparency and protecting individuals’ fundamental, constitutional right to vote. Never has Congress concluded that the privacy of sensitive personal information must give way in order for individuals to access voter registration. And indeed, it would not have done so as conditioning the right to vote on the release of private information “creates an intolerable burden on that right.” Long, 682 F.3d at 339. For these reasons, Plaintiff’s request for Oregon’s full and unredacted electronic voter file should be denied and the Complaint dismissed.
