Re: Alternative to Eminent Domain

Dear Mr. DeMarco,

Misusing and abusing the eminent domain process will not be successful.

There is the likelihood a legal challenge will succeed because it is not for a public purpose.

Eminent domain is of limited use only benefiting homeowners in a few states where deficiencies on Note can not be enforced.

There is another superior plan that can benefit the economy in all 50 States without abusing government powers or any risks to future borrowing.

Two years ago I devised this plan structured specifically to address this housing crisis.

The plan does not diminish the value of mortgage securities. But it does remove most impediments to home ownership caused by this crisis, the exception is home values.

There are no giveaways in this plan it is well balanced and will be embraced by the most conservative and frugal lenders as well as homeowners.

The Whitehouse was aware of the existence of this plan without the details.

The caveat is I require a guarantee that I will be able to retain intellectual property rights.

Please due your due diligence and contact me only if you can provide a guarantee.
