The image is a high-contrast, black and white scan of a computer monitor displaying the PAGIS (Police Access to Government Information System) interface. In the top left corner, there is a small logo of a shield with a star. The top right corner features the text "PIPS TECHNOLOGY". The main area of the screen is titled "12 Databases" and contains a table with three columns: a text field, a numerical field, and a status field. The first row shows "NCIC STOLEN PLATE" in the text field, "500" in the numerical field, and "On" in the status field. The second row shows a blacked-out text field, "500" in the numerical field, and "On" in the status field. The third row shows a blacked-out text field, "700" in the numerical field, and "On" in the status field. The fourth row shows a blacked-out text field, "800" in the numerical field, and "On" in the status field. The fifth row shows a blacked-out text field, "900" in the numerical field, and "On" in the status field. To the right of the table are two large buttons: "PAGE UP" and "PAGE DWN". At the bottom of the screen, there is a Windows taskbar. The taskbar includes the Start button, several open applications: "VZAccess Manager", "PAGIS", and "92710 picture 1 - Paint", and the system clock showing "10:55 AM".

Sgt. Senica;

Sir, I have done all the updates to the ALPR, attached hereto you will find the print screen pics taken from the TARU server and the ALPR Car 702 lap top indicating the updates.

I was told by the Tech at PIPS, the date to any particular database does not change until there are updates done (in other words, written) for that particular hotlist. Which means not necessarily all database dates will reflect the same. They will reflect the last date when updated if there were changes written for that particular hotlist.
