

PROTECT BOTH CIVIL RIGHTS AND FREE SPEECH AND ASSOCIATION

Co-Sponsor H.R. 1913, THE LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT HATE CRIMES PREVENTION ACT OF 2009

April 16, 2009

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
WASHINGTON
LEGISLATIVE OFFICE
915 15th STREET, NW, 6TH FL
WASHINGTON, DC 20005
T/202.544.1681
F/202.546.0738
WWW.ACLU.ORG

Caroline Fredrickson
DIRECTOR

NATIONAL OFFICE
125 BROAD STREET, 18TH FL.
NEW YORK, NY 10004-2400
T/212.549.2500

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS
Susan N. Herman
PRESIDENT

ANTHONY D. ROMERO
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

RICHARD ZACKS
TREASURER

RE: Co-Sponsor H.R. 1913, the Local Law Enforcement
Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 2009

Dear Representative:

The American Civil Liberties Union strongly urges you to co-sponsor H.R. 1913, the Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 2009. The legislation provides important new civil rights protections, while also providing an unprecedented level of statutory protection for free speech and association.

H.R. 1913 would make several important changes in federal civil rights law. It would provide new federal authority for investigating and prosecuting criminal civil rights violations, while also including strong protections for speech and association. Specifically, the bill would remove existing jurisdictional obstacles to the federal government prosecuting certain violent acts based on race, color, national origin, and religion, and also create new authority for the federal government to prosecute certain violent acts based on gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, and disability.

As important as this new authority is for protecting civil rights, the ACLU's support has been contingent on a specific evidentiary provision that prohibits the use of evidence of a defendant's speech or association unless specifically related to the crime. This evidentiary provision would be the strongest protection for free speech in the entire federal criminal code.

H.R. 1913 Protects Both Civil Rights and Free Speech

The ACLU has a long history of supporting civil rights legislation, including legislation responding to criminal civil rights violations. At the same time, no other organization in the country has a longer and more consistent record in protecting the freedoms embodied in the First Amendment to the Constitution.

For nearly a decade after the hate crimes legislation was first introduced in 1997, the ACLU withheld support for the bill out of concern that, unless amended to block evidence of speech and association not specifically related to a crime, it could chill constitutionally protected speech. That problem was fixed in 2005, and the ACLU strongly supports the legislation as protecting both civil rights and free speech and association. The language is identical to the bill that passed the House by a vote of 237-180 in the 110th Congress.

In fact, we are pleased that House Judiciary Committee Chairman John Conyers and more than 40 bipartisan co-sponsors included in the legislation a new evidentiary section that will be the strongest protection against the misuse of a person's free speech that Congress has enacted as part of the federal criminal code. No other section of the criminal code has an explicit provision prohibiting the use of a defendant's speech or association unless it was specifically related to the violent crime. This extraordinary and unprecedented provision will ensure that the hate crimes legislation will not chill constitutionally protected speech or association.

As a result, the ACLU is strongly urging support for this bill expanding the federal criminal civil rights statutes – so that there will be expanded federal jurisdiction to prosecute criminal civil rights violations when state and local governments are unwilling or unable to prosecute. The hate crimes bill accomplishes this goal by providing a stronger federal response to criminal civil rights violations, but tempering it with clear protections for free speech and association.

Important Provision on Free Speech and Association

The ACLU has a long record of support for stronger protection of both free speech and civil rights. Those positions are not inconsistent. In fact, vigilant protection of free speech rights historically has opened the doors to effective advocacy for expanded civil rights protections.

Sixteen years ago, the ACLU submitted a brief to the Supreme Court urging the Court to uphold a Wisconsin hate crimes sentencing enhancement statute as constitutional. However, the ACLU also asked the Court “to set forth a clear set of rules governing the use of such statutes in the future.” The ACLU warned the Court that “if the state is not able to prove that a defendant's speech is linked to specific criminal behavior, the chances increase that the state's hate crime prosecution is politically inspired.” The evidentiary provision in the House bill will help avoid that harm.

The ACLU appreciates the sponsors' inclusion of the evidentiary provision that prevents the hate crimes legislation from having any potentially chilling effect on constitutionally protected speech. The evidentiary subsection in the bill provides that:

In a prosecution for an offense under this section, evidence of expression or associations of the defendant may not be introduced as substantive evidence at trial, unless the evidence specifically relates to that offense. However, nothing in this section affects the rules of evidence governing the impeachment of a witness.

This provision will reduce or eliminate the possibility that the federal government could obtain a criminal conviction on the basis of evidence of speech that had no role in the chain of events that led to any alleged violent act proscribed by the statute.

This provision in the House bill almost exactly copies a paragraph in the Washington State hate crimes statute.¹ This Washington State language is not new; the paragraph was added to the Washington State statute as part of an amendment in 1993. The ACLU has conferred with litigators involved in hate crimes cases in Washington State. They report no complaints that the provision inappropriately impedes prosecutions.

On its face, the hate crimes bill punishes only the conduct of intentionally selecting another person for violence because of that person's race, color, national origin, religion, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability. The prosecution must prove the conduct of intentional selection of the victim. Thus, the hate crimes bill, like the present principal criminal civil rights statute, 18 U.S.C. § 245 ("section 245"), punishes discrimination (an act), not bigotry (a belief).

The federal government usually proves the intentional selection element of section 245 prosecutions by properly introducing ample evidence related to the chain of events. For example, in a section 245 prosecution based on race, a federal court of appeals found that the prosecution met its burden of proving that the defendant attacked the victim because of his race by introducing admissions that the defendant stated that "he had once killed a nigger queen," that he attacked the victim "[b]ecause he was a black fag," and by introducing evidence that the defendant allowed a white gay man to escape further attack, but relentlessly pursued the African American gay victim.²

Although the Justice Department has argued that it usually avoids attempting to introduce evidence proving nothing more than that a person holds racist or other bigoted views, it has at least occasionally introduced such evidence. In at least one decision, a federal court of appeals expressly found admissible such evidence that was wholly unrelated to the chain of events that resulted in the violent act.³ The court upheld the admissibility of a tattoo of a skinhead group on the inside lip of the defendant because "[t]he crime in this [section 245] case involved elements of racial hatred."⁴ The tattoo was admissible even in the absence of any evidence in the decision linking the skinhead group to the violent act.

The decision admitting that evidence of a tattoo confirmed our concerns expressed in the ACLU's brief filed with the Supreme Court in support of the Wisconsin hate crimes penalty enhancement statute. In asking for guidance from the Court on the applicability of such statutes,

¹ Wash. Rev. Code § 9A.36.080(4)

² Bledsoe, 728 F.2d at 1098.

³ United States v. Dunnaway, 88 F.3d 617 (8th Cir. 1996)

⁴ Id. at 618

the ACLU stated its concern that evidence of speech should not be relevant unless “the government proves that [the evidence] is directly related to the underlying crime and probative of the defendant’s discriminatory intent.” The ACLU brief urged that, “[a]t a minimum, any speech or association that is not contemporaneous with the crime must be part of the chain of events that led to the crime. Generalized evidence concerning the defendant’s racial views is not sufficient to meet this test.”

The evidentiary provision in the House hate crimes bill is important because, without it, we could see more evidence of unrelated speech admitted in hate crime prosecutions. Many of the arguments made in favor of hate crimes legislation today are very different than the arguments made in favor of enacting section 245 41 years ago. At that time, the focus was on giving the federal government jurisdiction to prosecute numerous murders of African Americans, including civil rights workers, which had gone unpunished by state and local prosecutors. The intent was to have a federal backstop to state and local law enforcement.

The problem today is that there is an increasing focus on “combating hate,” fighting “hate groups,” and identifying alleged perpetrators by their membership in such groups - even in the absence of any link between membership in the group and the violent act. Those arguments are very different from the arguments made in support of section 245 when it passed as an important part of the historic Civil Rights Act of 1968.

The evidentiary provision removes the danger that - after years of debate focused on combating “hate”- courts, litigants, and jurors applying a federal hate crimes statute could be more likely to believe that speech-related evidence that is unrelated to the chain of events leading to a violent act is a proper basis for proving the intentional selection element of the offense. The provision will remove the temptation for prosecutors to try to prove the selection element by showing “guilt by association” with groups whose bigoted views we may all find repugnant, but which may have had no role in committing the violent act. We should add that evidence of association could also just as easily focus on many groups representing the very persons that the hate crimes bill should protect.⁵ The evidentiary provision in the House bill precludes all such evidence from being used to prove the crime, unless it specifically related to the violent offense.

⁵ For example, many of the principal First Amendment association decisions arose from challenges to governmental investigations of civil rights and civil liberties organizations. See, e.g., Gibson v. Florida Legislative Investigation Committee, 372 U.S. 539 (1962) (holding that the NAACP could refuse to disclose its membership list to a state legislature investigating alleged Communist infiltration of civil rights groups); Bates v. City of Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516 (1960) (reversing a conviction of NAACP officials who refused to comply with local ordinances requiring disclosure of membership lists); NAACP v. State of Alabama, 357 U.S. 449 (1958) (holding as unconstitutional a judgment of contempt and fine on the NAACP for failure to produce its membership lists); New Jersey Citizen Action v. Edison Township, 797 F.2d 1250 (3rd Cir. 1986) (refusing to require the fingerprinting of door-to-door canvassers for a consumer rights group), cert. denied, sub nom. Piscataway v. New Jersey Citizen Action, 479 U.S. 1103 (1987); Familias Unidas v. Briscoe, 619 F.2d 391 (5th Cir. 1980) (refusing a request to compel the disclosure of the membership list of a public school reform group); Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador v. Sessions, 705 F.Supp. 25 (D.D.C. 1989) (denying a request for preliminary injunction against FBI’s dissemination of information collected on foreign policy group); Alliance to End Repression v. City of Chicago, 627 F.Supp. 1044 (1985) (police infiltrated and photographed activities of a civil liberties group and an anti-war group).

The evidentiary provision in the House hate crimes bill is not overly expansive. The provision will bar only evidence that had no specific relationship to the underlying violent offense. It will have no effect on the admissibility of evidence of speech that bears a specific relationship to the underlying crime - or evidence used to impeach a witness. Thus, the proposal will not bar all expressions or associations of the accused. It is a prophylactic provision that is precisely tailored to protect against the chilling of constitutionally protected free speech.

The Persistent Problem of Criminal Civil Rights Violations

The ACLU supports H.R. 1913 because we have long supported providing remedies against invidious discrimination and have long urged that discrimination by private persons be made illegal when it excludes persons from access to fundamental rights or from the opportunity to participate in the political or social life of the community. The serious problem of crime directed at members of society because of their race, color, religion, gender, national origin, sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability merits legislative action. Those crimes convey a constitutionally unprotected threat against the peaceable enjoyment of public places to members of the targeted group.

Pursuant to the Hate Crime Statistics Act, the Federal Bureau of Investigation annually collects and reports statistics on the number of bias-related criminal incidents reported by local and state law enforcement officials. For 2007, based on reports from state and local law enforcement agencies, the FBI reported 7,624 incidents covered by the Act.⁶ 3,870 of those incidents were related to race, 1,400 to religion, 1,265 to sexual orientation, 1,007 to ethnicity or national origin, 79 to disability, and 3 related to multiple-biases.

Existing federal law does not provide any separate offense for violent acts based on race, color, national origin, or religion, unless the defendant intended to interfere with the victim's participation in certain enumerated activities.⁷ During hearings in the Senate and House of Representatives, advocates for racial, ethnic, and religious minorities presented substantial evidence of the problems resulting from the inability of the federal government to prosecute crimes based on race, color, national origin, or religion without any tie to an enumerated activity. Those cases include violent crimes based on a protected class, which state or local officials either inadequately investigated or declined to prosecute.

In addition, existing federal law does not provide any separate offense whatsoever for violent acts based on sexual orientation, gender, gender identity, or disability. The exclusion of sexual orientation, gender, gender identity, and disability from section 245 of the criminal code can have bizarre results. For example, in an appeal by a person convicted of killing an African-American gay man, the defendant argued that "the evidence established, if anything, that he beat [the victim] because he believed him to be a homosexual and not because he was black."⁸ Among the evidence that the court cited in affirming the conviction because of violence based on race was testimony that the defendant killed the African-American gay victim, but allowed a white gay man to escape.⁹ Striking or killing a person solely because of that person's sexual orientation would not have resulted in a conviction under that federal statute.

⁶ <http://www.fbi.gov/ucr/hc2007/summary.htm>

⁷ 18 U.S.C.A. § 245(b)(2)

⁸ United States v. Bledsoe, 728 F.2d 1094, 1098 (8th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 838 (1984)

In addition to the highly publicized accounts of the deaths of Matthew Shepard and Billy Jack Gaither, other reports of violence because of a person's sexual orientation or gender identity include:

- An account by the Human Rights Campaign of "[a] lesbian security guard, 22, [who] was assigned to work a holiday shift with a guard from a temporary employment service. He propositioned her repeatedly. Finally, she told him she was a lesbian. Issuing anti-lesbian slurs, he raped her."

- A report by Mark Weinress, during an American Psychological Association briefing on hate crimes, of his beating by two men who yelled "we kill faggots" and "die faggots" at the victim and his partner from the defendants' truck, chased the victims on foot while shouting "death to faggots," and beat the victims with a billy club while responding "we kill faggots" when a bystander asked what the defendants were doing.

- A report by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force of a letter from a person who wrote that she "was gang-raped for being a lesbian. Four men beat me, spat on me, urinated on me, and raped me When I reported the incident to Fresno police, they were sympathetic until they learned I was homosexual. They closed their book, and said, 'Well, you were asking for it.'"

- An article in the Washington Post about five Marines who left the Marine Barracks on Capitol Hill to throw a tear gas canister into a nearby gay bar. Several persons were treated for nausea and other gas-related symptoms.

The problem of crimes based on gender is also persistent. For example, two women cadets at the Citadel, a military school that has only recently opened its doors to female students, were singled out and "hazed" by male cadets who did not believe that women had a right to be at the school. Male cadets allegedly sprayed the two women with nail polish remover and then set their clothes ablaze, not once, but three times within a two month period. One male cadet also threatened one of the two women by saying that he would cut her "heart out" if he ever saw her alone off campus.

Federal legislation addressing such criminal civil rights violations is necessary because state and local law enforcement officers are sometimes unable or unwilling to prosecute those crimes because of either inadequate resources or their own bias against the victim. The prospect of such failure to provide equal protection of the laws justifies federal jurisdiction.

For example, state and local law enforcement officials have often been hostile to the needs of gay men and lesbians. The fear of state and local police - which many gay men and lesbians share with members of other minorities - is not unwarranted. For example, until recently, the Maryland state police department refused to employ gay men or lesbians as state police officers. In addition, only blocks from the Capitol a few years ago, a District of Columbia police lieutenant who headed the police unit that investigates extortion cases was arrested by the FBI for attempting to extort $10,000 from a man seen leaving a gay bar. Police officers referred to the practice as “fairy shaking.” The problem is widespread. In fact, the National Coalition of Anti-Violence Programs reports several hundred anti-gay incidents allegedly committed by state and local law enforcement officers annually. The federal government clearly has an enforcement role when state and local governments fail to provide equal protection of the laws.

⁹ Id. at 1095, 1098

We strongly urge you to co-sponsor the Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 2009.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Caroline Fredrickson', written in a cursive style.

Caroline Fredrickson
Director, Washington Legislative Office

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Christopher Anders', written in a cursive style.

Christopher Anders
Senior Legislative Counsel