EDITORIALS/OPINIONS

Editorial: U.S. Can Earn More Goodwill In Pakistan, an editorial in the Islamabad-based rightist English daily "Pakistan Observer" (cir. 5,000) (01/08)

"The soft-spoken U.S. Ambassador in Pakistan Anne Patterson Wednesday announced one billion rupees financial assistance for the many small businesses of Karachi which suffered losses during the Boulton Martket attack.... Such goodwill gestures earn wider recognition and appreciation from the common man. In our view the U.S. needs to take more similar initiatives to remove any ill will, right or wrong, towards Washington.... It is a fact that traditionally the people and the Government of Pakistan feel comfortable while dealing with the U.S. and these steps would earn more goodwill for the U.S. in Pakistan."

Editorial: Other Voices - Pushto Press U.S. Funds For Tribal Areas, an editorial in the Karachi-based center-left independent national English daily "Dawn" (cir. 55,000) (01/08)

"U.S. Envoy to Pakistan Anne Patterson has announced that her country would donate Rs4.5bn for the development of war-torn South Waziristan. Patterson regarded the aid as part of an agreement signed on September 30, 2009, under which the U.S. government promised to donate Rs75bn.... This will help Pakistan remove the tag of a state heading towards failure and earn it respect. Pakistan should be respected for its efforts against terrorism. The people of the tribal areas can only be taken on board to fight against extremism and terrorism if their social and economic problems are solved."

Editorial: Outrageously Bad, an editorial in the center-right national English daily "The Nation" (cir. 20,000) (01/08)

"The U.S. has ridden roughshod over our sovereignty; rather than ending the drone attacks, it has intensified them, bringing more Pakistani territory under the fury of its blitz. A flagrant violation of Pakistan's sovereignty, these strikes speak volumes about the Obama Administration's unilateralist policies and military adventurism resembling the situation in Afghanistan where thousands of civilians have been crushed to death so far, thanks to a joystick controlled thousands of miles away in the U.S. and raining missiles on a hapless population... These strikes must stop if the region is to be prevented from witnessing further bloodshed and chaos."

Editorial: Spreading Terror, an editorial in the Karachi-based center-left independent national English daily "Dawn" (cir. 55,000) (01/08)

"Wednesday's bombing was reportedly the first such attack outside the AJK capital. Clearly, the tentacles of terror are spreading. When the Taliban and their affiliates first turned against Pakistan, their sphere of operations was limited mostly to the NWFP and Fata. But their reach grew under a government that was ostensibly fighting militancy and at the same time cutting peace deals from a position of weakness. The so-called Punjabi Taliban started making their presence felt and various extremist outfits across the country also closed ranks with the tribal militants."

Editorial: Someone Has To Step Forward To Correct The System, an editorial in the second-largest, nationalist Urdu daily "Nawa-i-Waqt" (cir. 150,000) (01/08)

"[In the current scenario] either the Supreme Court has to step forward as the liberator, or undemocratic forces will once again get the opportunity to oust democracy. If this happens, would Mian Nawaz Sharif not be partially responsible? U.S. Ambassador Anne W. Patterson, during her trip to Karachi, has already stated that an effective leadership is imperative for Pakistan. In beggar-countries such as ours, the only effective leadership in American eyes is that of dictator-generals, through which it can easily fulfill its objectives."

Editorial: Accept The Offer Of Talks, an editorial in the second-largest, nationalist Urdu daily "Nawa-i-Waqt" (cir. 150,000) (01/08)

"Fifteen persons were killed and 6 injured in three consecutive drone strikes in North Waziristan... Hundreds of tribal Muslim brethren have been killed in drone attacks so far. There are hundreds of informers working for CIA, FBI and other agencies in these areas; they have their own method of giving information to drones about suspect areas, and without any confirmation they send the drones on their destructive mission.... Maulana Samiul Haq, Gen.(retired) Hamid Gul and Tehrik-i-Insaf chief Imran Khan have repeatedly offered the government that they are willing to act as mediators with the tribal elders... The government must unconditionally accept this offer so that the war can be contained."

Opinion: Realization In The USA At Last?, an op-ed by Dr. Ijaz Ahsan in the center-right national English daily "The Nation" (cir. 20,000) (01/08)

"Among a section of the U.S. media, the realization seems to be coming about that American adventures in Iraq and Afghanistan are counterproductive.... I feel that if the Americans keep writing at this rate and with such force of argument, U.S. troops may go home earlier than anyone expects."

Opinion: Mr. Bush All Over Again, an op-ed by Dr. Muzaffar Iqbal in the populist, often sensational national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (01/08)

"With one failed attempt, Mr. Obama has shed all his coloring and now talks exactly like Mr. Bush. His words state what Bush used to: all other human beings are somehow less human than Americans. Had that not been the case, Mr. Obama would have stopped the drone attacks in Pakistan in respect of the lives of innocent women and children.... He would have asked: 'Is it not strange that when Americans kill, no one is supposed to mourn those deaths, no country is allowed to take any measures against continuous American attacks, but it is always the other way around.' When seven CIA agents were killed in Afghanistan last week, the most obvious question that should have been asked was: what were they doing there? Why were they there in the first place? But no one asked that question, at least not in America."

Opinion: Planned hype, an op-ed by Dr. Masooda Bano in the populist, often sensational national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (01/08)

"The crisis mode created around President Zardari's speech has an air of planned maneuvering around it.... Commentators are arguing that he is putting the country at risk by entering into a confrontation with the U.S. and other institutions of the state.... There is nothing in Zardari's speech that is not part of the popular belief. If he hinted towards the role of U.S. in weakening institutions in Iraq and Afghanistan, and argued that Pakistan won't be allowed to reach that stage while talking about the forces within the state, which are out to destabilize the democratic process, the question is what is so shocking about it. Anyone who engages with the ordinary public on these issues knows that both are popularly argued positions and many within the masses actually want the government to keep a distance from the U.S."

Opinion: India's Challenge, an op-ed by Ayesha Siddiqa in the Karachi-based center-left independent national English daily "Dawn" (cir. 55,000) (01/08)

UNCLASSIFIED

"The statement by Indian army chief Gen. Deepak Kapoor regarding his army's capacity to fight a two-front war upset a lot of people in Pakistan. Both Pakistan's army chief and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Committee rebutted such superfluous claims.... However, Kapoor's statement is one of the many symbols of the growing significance of India's military in the country's security and foreign policy paradigm, particularly as far as Pakistan, China and the U.S. are concerned."

Opinion: Cultivating Brevity And Calmness, an op-ed by Ayaz Amir in the populist, often sensational national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (01/08)

"Gen. Kapoor's two-front war assessment has been read in Pakistan almost as a declaration of war, and everyone responding to it has done so with a mixture of anger and heightened alarm. From Gen. Kayani has come this warning: 'Proponents of conventional application of military forces, in a nuclear overhang, are charting an adventurous path, the consequences of which could be both unintended and uncontrollable.' The foreign minister has been livid as has been the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Gen Tariq Majeed. Has all this wordiness been necessary? Are we such an insecure nation that a single misinterpreted statement can so unsettle us? If a riposte was necessary, a one-liner from the Inter-Services Public Relations would have served the purpose. Something like, 'Everyone is entitled to his fantasies,' delivered with an ironic curl of the lips."

Opinion: What is Gen. Kapoor Rationale?, an op-ed by A. Siddique in the center-right national English daily "The Nation" (cir. 20,000) (01/08)

"Apparently General Kapoor wants to restart the sounding of the Indian mindset that tends to play down efficacy of Pakistan's nuclear deterrence hoping that it would be able to launch aggression without crossing the nuclear threshold.... The military threat and response is a dynamic and evolving issue. And the Pakistan army cannot rest on its laurels in keeping the threat of Indian aggression on bay. The Indian 'Cold Start Strategy' certainly would have been analyzed by the Pakistan army and a response forged; one is certain. Needless to say, Pakistan's nuclear deterrent needs to remain credible, effective and relevant to the timeframe of operations that the Indian Army Chief, General Deepak Kapoor, is contemplating. If the Indian design is to present a fait accompli before a nuclear response materializes then the preparedness level of our nuclear deterrent needs to be tailored accordingly. Possessing tactical nuclear weapons that should destroy the invaders without crossing the Indian nuclear threshold should prove instrumental in deterring a reckless adventure."
