

No Longer Welcome?

For 118 years, the Statue of Liberty has served as a beacon of hope for immigrants around the world—welcoming the tired, poor and huddled masses yearning to breathe free.

But not for much longer if Republican leaders in Congress get their way.

They are trying to use the 9/11 Commission's recommendations as an excuse to rush through all kinds of new and controversial anti-immigration proposals that will force Lady Liberty to turn her back on immigrants across America.

Were these changes proposed by the 9/11 Commission as part of its recommendations to improve national security?

Not a chance.

In fact, six of the bipartisan Commission's members, including its co-chairmen Tom Kean and Lee Hamilton, recently held a press conference denouncing the anti-immigration proposals and asking Congress to take them out of the 9/11 bill.

And they are not alone. Many of the 9/11 victims' families have also asked Congress to drop those provisions from the bill.

President Bush and Senators Ben Nighthorse Campbell and Wayne Allard can help, too.
