President Barack Obama
The White House
Washington, DC

Dear Mr. President,

In November 2009, many of the undersigned organizations wrote to you to express our concern over the lack of nominations to the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board (PCLOB). We write again, with increased urgency, to encourage you to appoint individuals immediately.

The Congress first created the Board in 2004, based on the recommendations of the bipartisan 9/11 Commission. In 2007, Congress restructured the Board, strengthening it and moving it outside of the White House. The Board was designed to play a vital independent role in oversight of privacy and civil liberties. It is one of the few safeguards adopted to protect Americans from improper intrusions into our privacy and civil liberties as part of the major legal and policy changes put in place to fight terrorism. However, the 2007 legislation that provided the Board with independence and subpoena powers remains an unfulfilled promise, because without anyone even nominated to fill these positions, the revamped Board does not yet exist.

As a result of the attempted Christmas Day bombing, your Administration and Congress are considering numerous policy changes that impact the privacy and freedoms of Americans, including expanding watch lists and more intrusive searches at airports. It is crucial that you nominate qualified individuals to serve on the PCLOB, so that it may begin to provide guidance as new policies and procedures are developed.

On January 20, 2010, the Director of National Intelligence, Admiral Dennis Blair, told the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, "I think ... that that panel should be -- should be manned up and started. It would provide a very valuable service".

In testimony before the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee on January 26, 2010, the Chair and Vice-Chair of the 9/11 Commission, Governor Thomas Keane and Congressman Lee Hamilton, urged you to act immediately:

With massive capacity to develop data on individuals, the Board has to be the champion of seeing that collection capabilities do not intrude into privacy and civil liberties. We continue to believe that the Board provides critical functions and we urge President Obama to reconstitute it, quickly appoint its Members, and allow them full access to the information and the authority to perform to perform this essential function.

In addition, Representatives Bennie Thompson and Jane Harman and Senator Susan Collins, who hold key positions on the House and Senate Homeland Security

Committees respectively, as well as your own Cybersecurity Review have all called for the prompt restoration of the PCLOB. We urge you to nominate members to the Board without delay.

Sincerely,
(list in formation)
