20 Pending before the Court are Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 413),

21 Plaintiffs' Renewed Motion for Class Certification (Doc. 420), Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial 22 Summary Judgment (Doc. 421), and Defendants' Motion for Leave to File Sur-Reply. (Doc.

23 469). At oral arguments on December 22, 2011, Plaintiffs moved for summary judgment on 24 Ortega-Melendres's Fourth Amendment claims. (Doc. 490). For the reasons stated below,

25 Defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted in part and denied in part, Plaintiffs'

26 motion for partial summary judgment on the Equal Protection claims is denied, Plaintiffs'

27 motion for summary judgment on the Fourth Amendment claims is granted in part and denied

28 in part, Plaintiffs' motion for class certification is granted, and Defendants' motion for leave

1 to file a sur-reply is dismissed as moot.¹

2 BACKGROUND

3 1. Factual Background

4 This putative class action civil rights suit alleges that the Maricopa County Sheriff's 5 Office ("MCSO") engages in a policy or practice of racial profiling, and a policy stopping 6 persons without reasonable suspicion that criminal activity is afoot, in violation of Plaintiffs' 7 rights under the Fourteenth and Fourth Amendments. (Doc. 26 ¶ 2). Under an agreement with 8 the Department of Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE"), certain MCSO deputies 9 had been certified to enforce federal civil immigration law. (Doc 413, Ex. 5). The agreement 10 between MCSO and ICE operated pursuant to section 287(g) of the Immigration and 11 Nationality Act ("INA"), and the participating officers were therefore said to be 287(g) 12 certified. 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g) (2006). On October 16, 2009, the agreement between MCSO and 13 ICE was modified so that MCSO officers no longer had authority to enforce federal civil 14 immigration violations in the field, but could continue to do so in the jails. (Doc. 422 ¶ 10).
15 Plaintiffs allege that under the guise of enforcing immigration law, MCSO officers are in fact 16 engaged in a policy of racially profiling Latinos. (Doc. 26 ¶ 3).

17 The five named Plaintiffs were stopped by MCSO officers during three incidents, on 18 September 27, 2007, December 7, 2007, and March 28, 2008. (Id. ¶¶ 53–119). In addition, 19 Somos America ("Somos"), a non-profit membership organization, claims that it and its 20 members have been harmed by the alleged policy. (Id. ¶ 10). In Count One, Plaintiffs claim 21 that MCSO has violated and is violating the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth 22 Amendment. (Id. ¶¶ 128–37). In Count Two, they allege that MCSO's stops of the named 23 Plaintiffs violated the Fourth Amendment, as applied to MCSO through the Fourteenth 24 Amendment. (Id. ¶¶ 138–43). In Count Three, they allege that those same stops also violated

25
26 ¹ Plaintiffs' motion for sanctions (Doc. 416) was granted in an order issued earlier 27 today. (Doc. 493). A discussion of the history of discovery issues in this case is contained 28 in that order.

1 the search and seizure protections of Article II, Section 8 of the Arizona State Constitution.
2 (Id. ¶¶ 144–47). In Count Four, they argue that MCSO’s policy violates Title VI of the Civil 3 Rights Act of 1964, which forbids race discrimination in federally funded programs. (Id. ¶¶ 4 148–54). Plaintiffs seek certification of a class consisting of “All Latino persons who, since
5 January 2007, have been or will be in the future, stopped, detained, questioned or searched
6 by MCSO agents while driving or sitting in a vehicle on a public roadway or parking area 7 in Maricopa County, Arizona.” (Doc. 420 at 1). Plaintiffs seek only equitable relief, in the 8 form of a declaratory judgment, an injunction against Defendant, attorneys’ fees, and “such 9 other relief as the Court deems just and proper.” (Doc. 26 at 28–29).

10 Defendants now move for summary judgment on all counts. First, they argue that the 11 Plaintiffs are not likely to suffer future injury, and that they therefore lack standing to obtain 12 equitable relief under the test established in City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95 (1983).
13 (Doc. 413 at 14–17). Next, they argue that the vehicle traffic stops of the named Plaintiffs 14 were supported by probable cause, and that the Fourth Amendment and Arizona 15 Constitutional claims therefore fail under Whren v. U.S., 517 U.S. 806 (1996). (Doc. 413 at 16 18–22). Finally, they claim that the record shows that MCSO does not engage in intentional 17 discrimination, and that the Fourteenth Amendment and Title VI claims therefore fail. (Doc.
18 413 at 23–31). Plaintiffs seek summary judgment on Claim One and Claim Four, and 19 certification of their proposed class. (Docs. 416, 420, 421).

20 2. Legal Background

21 In 1952, Congress passed the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”), 8 U.S.C. § 22 1101 et seq., which set forth “a comprehensive federal statutory scheme for regulation of 23 immigration and naturalization.” De Canas v. Bica, 424 U.S. 351, 353 (1976). The INA
24 contains both criminal and civil provisions regarding those who either enter the United States 25 without legal authority or enter with legal authority but remain after that authority expires.
26 See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. §§ 1302, 1306, 1325 (2006) (criminal provisions); 8 U.S.C. §§ 27 1182(a)(6)(A)(i), 1227(a)(1)(B)–(C) (2006) (civil provisions regarding admissibility and 28

1 deportation). The Supreme Court, referencing specific criminal provisions of the INA, has 2 written that “entering or remaining unlawfully in this country is itself a crime.” I.N.S. v.
3 Lopez-Mendoza, 468 U.S. 1032, 1038 (1984). The criminal provisions cited in Lopez-
4 Mendoza set forth with particularity what actions constitute “entering or remaining 5 unlawfully.” For example, entering or attempting to enter the United States other than at a 6 legal border crossing is a federal crime. 8 U.S.C. § 1325. A non-citizen who remains within 7 the United States and willfully fails to register or be fingerprinted after thirty days, or who 8 knowingly files a fraudulent application, has also committed a federal offense. 8 U.S.C.
9 §§1302, 1306. All aliens over the age of 18, moreover, must carry their registration papers 10 at all times, under penalty of a criminal misdemeanor. 8 U.S.C. § 1304(e). There is no 11 provision in the INA or any other federal law, however, that specifically criminalizes mere 12 presence in the United States without authority to remain.² The Supreme Court has 13 acknowledged that “[a] deportation proceeding is a purely civil action to determine eligibility 14 to remain in this country.” Lopez-Mendoza, 468 U.S. 1032.

15 Being present in the country without authorization to remain “is only a civil 16 violation.” Gonzales v. City of Peoria, 722 F.2d 468, 476 (9th Cir. 1983) overruled on other 17 grounds by Hodgers-Durgin v. de la Vina, 199 F.3d 1037 (9th Cir. 1999). Nothing in Lopez-
18 Mendoza alters this law. In a recent decision, the Ninth Circuit found that a state trooper did 19 not commit an “egregious violation” of the Fourth Amendment sufficient to trigger the 20 exclusionary rule in a civil proceeding because the language of Lopez-Mendoza was such that 21 “a reasonable officer could have interpreted that statement to mean an alien’s unlawful 22 presence in this country is itself a crime.” Martinez-Medina v. Holder, 616 F.3d 1011, 1017 23 (9th Cir. 2010). In amending and superceding that opinion, the court clarified that

24
25 ² It is also a crime for a person who has previously been denied admission, excluded, 26 deported or removed to be present in the United States unless the Attorney General expressly 27 consents to the person’s reapplication for admission or the alien establishes that he was not 28 required to obtain such advance consent. 8 U.S.C. § 1326(a).

1 “[a]lthough a reasonable officer could have been confused by these statements in Lopez-
2 Mendoza and Martinez . . . a close reading of those cases demonstrates that neither meant to 3 suggest that an alien’s mere unauthorized presence is itself a crime.” Martinez-Medina, ___ 4 F.3d ___, 2011 WL 855791, at *6 (9th. Cir. Mar. 11, 2011). The panel went on to emphasize 5 that “Gonzales’s observation that ‘an alien who is illegally present in the United States . . .
6 [commits] only a civil violation,’ . . . remain[s] the law of the circuit, binding on law
7 enforcement officers.” Id. (quoting Gonzales, 722 F.2d at 476–77). An alien who “overstays 8 a valid visa or otherwise remains in the country after the expiration of a period authorized 9 by the Department of Homeland Security,” therefore, although he may be subject to 10 deportation, has violated no criminal statute. Martinez-Medina, ___ F.3d at ___, 2011 WL 11 855791, at *5 n.4.

12 Officers enforcing the immigration laws must comply with the Fourth Amendment, 13 which protects the right of the people to be free from “unreasonable searches and seizures.” 14 U.S. CONST. amend IV. Probable cause to arrest a person will flow when “the facts and 15 circumstances within the knowledge of the arresting officers and of which they had 16 reasonably trustworthy information were sufficient to warrant a prudent man in believing that 17 [the person arrested] had committed or was committing an offense.” United States v. Jensen, 18 425 F.3d 698, 704 (9th Cir. 2005). Absent probable cause, when circumstances require 19 “necessarily swift action predicated upon the on-the-spot observations of the officer on the 20 beat,” officers may make brief investigatory seizures based only on reasonable suspicion that 21 “criminal activity may be afoot.” Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 20, 30 (1968). An investigatory 22 stop is lawful if an officer “reasonably suspects that the person apprehended is committing 23 or has committed a criminal offense.” Arizona v. Lemon Montrea Johnson, 555 U.S. 323, 326
24 (2009). Stopping a vehicle is usually “analogous to a so-called ‘Terry stop’”; officers 25 ordinarily may stop a vehicle based on reasonable suspicion of criminal activity. Berkemer
26 v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 439 (1984).

27 Federal ICE officers have the power to investigate and enforce both criminal and civil 28

1 immigration law, including the power to “interrogate any alien or person believed to be an 2 alien as to his right to be or to remain in the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1357(a)(1).
3 Authorized officers may stop vehicles pursuant to this authority so long as “they are aware 4 of specific articulable facts, together with rational inferences from those facts, that 5 reasonably warrant suspicion that the vehicles contain aliens who may be illegally in the 6 country.” U.S. v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. 873, 884 (1975). Reasonable suspicion for a 7 federal officer to stop a car to investigate the immigration status of the occupants depends 8 upon the “totality of the circumstances.” U.S. v. Arvizu, 534 U.S. 266, 277 (2002) (border 9 patrol agent had reasonable suspicion to stop a minivan when (1) it had turned onto a dirt 10 road frequently used by smugglers to avoid a checkpoint, (2) it had slowed when the driver 11 saw the officer, (3) the children sitting in the back began to wave mechanically, and (4) the 12 children had their knees propped up, as though there was cargo beneath them).

13 In considering the totality of the circumstances, however, “an officer cannot rely 14 solely on generalizations that, if accepted, would cast suspicion on large segments of the 15 lawabiding population.” U.S. v. Manzo-Jurado, 457 F.3d 928, 935 (9th Cir. 2006). Hispanic 16 appearance, for example, is “of such little probative value that it may not be considered as 17 a relevant factor where particularized or individualized suspicion is required.” U.S. v.
18 Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 1122, 1135 (9th Cir. 2000). Moreover, while an inability to 19 speak English is probative of immigration status, it does not supply reasonable suspicion 20 unless “other factors suggest that the individuals are present in this country illegally.” 21 Manzo-Jurado, 457 F.3d at 937. The Ninth Circuit has also held that “individuals’ 22 appearance as a Hispanic work crew, inability to speak English, proximity to the border, and 23 unsuspecting behavior,” taken together, do not provide a federal immigration officer 24 reasonable suspicion to conduct a stop. Id. at 932.

25 Local law enforcement officers who have been certified under section 287(g) may 26 “perform a function of an immigration officer in relation to the investigation, apprehension, 27 or detention of aliens in the United States.” 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g)(1). They are therefore 28

1 permitted to enforce civil violations of federal immigration law. Officers certified under the 2 287(g) program may make traffic stops based upon a reasonable suspicion, considering the 3 totality of the circumstances, that people in the vehicle are not authorized to be in the United 4 States. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. at 884.

5 Local law enforcement officers, however, do not have the “inherent authority” to 6 investigate civil immigration violations, including status violations. U.S. v. Arizona, 641 F.3d
7 339, 362 (9th Cir. 2011).³ Since the MCSO lost its 287(g) field authority after October 16, 8 2009, the only immigration laws its officers can investigate are federal criminal laws or state 9 laws that have not been enjoined. Gonzales, 722 F.2d at 476–77.

10 Local law enforcement officers, even those not certified under 287(g), are generally 11 not prohibited from investigating and enforcing federal criminal law. Ker v. California, 374 12 U.S. 23, 37 (1963). The Ninth Circuit has held that local law enforcement officers, therefore, 13 may investigate and enforce “the criminal provisions of the [INA].” Gonzales, 722 F.2d at 14 477.⁴ Non-287(g) officers may detain those whom they have reasonable suspicion to believe 15 have illegally crossed a border in violation of § 1325, fraudulently filed an immigration 16 application under § 1306, failed to carry documentation of their immigration status under 17 § 1304(e), or committed other criminal immigration violations.

18 Moreover, actual knowledge, let alone suspicion, that an alien is illegally present is 19 not sufficient to form a reasonable belief he has violated federal criminal immigration law.

20
21 ³ The Supreme Court has granted a writ of certiorari to review the Ninth Circuit’s
22 decision. U.S. v. Arizona, 641 F.3d 339, 362 (9th Cir. 2011), cert. granted 60 U.S.L.W. 3090 23 (U.S. Dec. 12, 2011) (No. 11-182). The question presented in that case is whether federal 24 laws impliedly preempt four provisions of SB 1070 on their face. Id. The Supreme Court has 25 not been asked to decide whether states have an inherent authority to enforce civil provisions of the immigration law. At oral argument, Defendants conceded that they had no authority to enforce federal civil immigration law.

26 ⁴ Plaintiffs stated at oral argument that local law enforcement officers do not have the 27 inherent authority to enforce federal criminal immigration law. They cited no authority for 28 this proposition, which is in conflict with Gonzales, upon which they otherwise rely.

1 The Ninth Circuit recently affirmed that “an alien’s ‘admission of illegal presence . . . does 2 not, without more, provide probable cause of the criminal violation of illegal entry,’” 3 precisely because the criminal sections of the INA contain additional elements, such as 4 crossing a border without authorization, willfully refusing to register, or filing a fraudulent
5 application. Martinez-Medina, ___ F.3d ___, 2011 WL 855791, at *6 (quoting Gonzales, 722
6 F.2d at 476–77).⁵ MCSO officers, none of whom are now 287(g) certified, therefore have no 7 power to detain or investigate violations such as those “regulating authorized entry, length 8 of stay, residence status, and deportation.” U.S. v. Arizona, 641 F.3d at 362. Seizing a civilian 9 pursuant to such a violation, absent reasonable suspicion of criminal activity, violates the 10 Fourth Amendment.

11 Local law enforcement officers can investigate violations of state law, including 12 validly enforceable state laws that involve immigration matters. The State of Arizona, in 13 response to “rampant illegal immigration, escalating drug and human trafficking crimes, and 14 serious public safety concerns,” along with a perceived failure by the federal government to 15 enforce federal immigration law, has passed a number of state laws involving immigration 16 issues. U.S. v. Arizona, 703 F. Supp. 2d 980, 985 (D. Ariz. 2010). Some of the provisions of 17 Senate Bill (“SB”) 1070, one of the laws in question, have been enjoined, but some portions 18 of the law remain valid.

19 Portions of SB 1070 that have not been enjoined allow local law enforcement officials 20 to turn over those who have been convicted of a state crime to federal authorities to 21 determine their immigration status. Ariz. Rev. Stat. (“A.R.S.”) § 11-1051(C)–(F); See U.S.
22 v. Arizona, 703 F. Supp. 2d at 985 (D. Ariz. 2010) (upholding the provisions). Additionally, 23

25 ⁵The Tenth Circuit has found that officers have probable cause to believe people have 26 crossed a border without authorization when their car was stopped legally, the driver of the 27 vehicle failed to provide a valid driver’s license, the driver and his passenger admitted they 28 were not legally present in the country, and the driver and passenger “indicated they were coming from Mexico.” U.S. v. Santana-Garcia, 264 F.3d 1188, 1193 (10th Cir. 2001).

1 a person who is “in violation of a criminal offense” commits a further offence if he transports 2 or moves an unauthorized alien “if the person recklessly disregards” that person’s unlawful 3 status. A.R.S. § 13-2929(A)(1) (2010). However, no one may determine the transported 4 alien’s status except for a federal officer or a “law enforcement officer who is authorized by 5 the federal government to verify or ascertain an alien’s immigration status.” A.R.S. § 13-6 2929(D)(1)–(2). Officers without such authorization cannot therefore collect evidence to 7 satisfy a key element of the crime.⁶

8 In addition, some Arizona state immigration laws predate SB 1070. The Legal 9 Arizona Workers Act of 2007 allows state courts to suspend or revoke the license to do 10 business of any employer who knowingly or intentionally employs an alien who is not 11 authorized to work. A.R.S. §§ 23-211, 212, 212.01 (2007). It has been held to be 12 constitutional by the Supreme Court. See Chamber of Commerce of U.S. v. Whiting, 131 13 S.Ct. 1968, 1977 (2011) (upholding the measure). However, the law explicitly provides an 14 enforcement process by which individuals file written complaints to the Attorney General, 15

16 ⁶ SB 1070 also includes provisions prohibiting stopping a vehicle “to hire or pick up 17 passengers for work at a different location if the motor vehicle blocks or impedes the normal 18 movement of traffic,” or for someone to enter a vehicle for such a purpose while the vehicle 19 blocks or impedes traffic. A.R.S. § 13-2928(A)–(B). These provisions have not been 20 enjoined, but their status remains uncertain. In upholding them, the district court found that 21 “the June 9, 2010, decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in a case contesting a 22 virtually identical local ordinance in Redondo Beach, California forecloses a challenge.” U.S.
23 v. Arizona, 703 F. Supp. 2d at 1000 (citing Comite de Jornaleros de Redondo Beach v. City 24 of Redondo Beach, 607 F.3d 1178, 1184–93 (9th Cir. 2010)). An en banc decision of the 25 Ninth Circuit has since overturned that panel decision and found that the Redondo Beach 26 ordinance, Redondo Beach Mun. Code § 3–7.1601(a), is “a facially unconstitutional 27 restriction on speech,” since soliciting work as a day laborer is protected First Amendment 28 activity. Comite de Jornaleros de Redondo Beach v. City of Redondo Beach, 657 F.3d 936, 940 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc). It is therefore not clear whether local law enforcement officers, including MCSO officers, can enforce A.R.S. § 13–2928(A) or § 13–2928(B). In an unrelated lawsuit, a preliminary injunction is currently being sought against A.R.S.
§ 13–2928(A) and § 13–2928(B) based on the en banc ruling in Redondo Beach. See
Friendly House, et al. v. Whiting, et al., CV-10-01061-SRB.

1 who in turn conducts an investigation before a license is revoked. A.R.S. § 23-212. It has no 2 provisions through which enforcement actions can be taken against employees, and 3 specifically exempts independent contractors from its definition of “employee,” suggesting 4 that it cannot be enforced against those who hire day laborers as independent contractors.
5 A.R.S. § 23-211(3)(b).

6 Since 2005, human smuggling has been an Arizona state crime. A.R.S. § 13-2319
7 (2010). The human smuggling statute reads: “It is unlawful for a person to intentionally 8 engage in the smuggling of human beings for profit or commercial purpose.” A.R.S. § 13-9 2319(A). The statute defines “smuggling of human beings” as “the transportation, 10 procurement of transportation or use of property or real property by a person or an entity that 11 knows or has reason to know that the person or persons transported or to be transported are 12 not United States citizens, permanent resident aliens or persons otherwise lawfully in this 13 state or have attempted to enter, entered or remained in the United States in violation of law.”
14 A.R.S. § 13-2319(F)(3). In order for the elements of the crime to be satisfied, therefore, a 15 person must 1) transport, procure transportation for, or harbor a person, 2) know or have 16 reason to know that the person is not legally in the country, and 3) do so for profit or 17 commercial purpose.⁷ If a driver does not know or have reason to know that his passengers 18 are not legally in the country, no one has violated the statute. If the transportation is not being 19 conducted for profit or a commercial purpose, no one has violated the statute. People who 20 cross the international border at an unauthorized location have violated 8 U.S.C. § 1325, but 21 have not violated or conspired to violate the human smuggling statute unless the other 22

23 ⁷ A current lawsuit in the District Court of Arizona challenges a policy in which “non-24 smuggler migrants” are “arrest[ed], detain[ed], and punish[ed] . . . for conspiring to transport 25 themselves.” We are America/Somos America, Coalition of Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Bd. of 26 Supervisors, ___ F. Supp. 2d. ___, 2011 WL 3629352 (D. Ariz. Aug. 18, 2011, CV-06-27 02816-RCB). For the purposes of this order, the Court assumes, without deciding, that those 28 who are smuggled may be prosecuted for conspiring to smuggle themselves, so long as all elements of the statute are satisfied.

1 elements of A.R.S. § 13-2319 are met.

2 A law enforcement officer must have a reasonable suspicion that the smuggling is 3 “afoot” to conduct a brief investigatory stop to enforce the human smuggling law. Terry, 392 4 U.S. at 20. Therefore, an officer must have reasonable suspicion that 1) a person is being 5 transported or harbored, 2) by a person who knows or has reason to know that the person 6 being transported or harbored is not legally present in Arizona or the United States, and 3) 7 that the person is currently being transported or harbored “for profit or commercial purpose.”
8 A.R.S. § 13-2319(A)–(F). The fact that a law enforcement officer suspects, or even knows, 9 that a vehicle passenger is not legally present in the country does not in and of itself provide 10 reasonable suspicion that the passenger was or is being “smuggled.” Moreover, a passenger’s 11 lack of legal status, standing alone, is in no way probative as to whether the driver is 12 transporting the passenger for profit or commercial purpose. Since “an alien’s ‘admission of 13 illegal presence . . . does not, without more, provide probable cause of the criminal violation 14 of illegal entry,’” knowledge of illegal presence, standing alone, can likewise not provide 15 reasonable suspicion or probable cause that the human smuggling statute has been violated 16 sufficient to justify a Terry stop. Martinez-Medina, 2011 WL 855791, at *6.

17 A minor traffic infraction provides officers sufficient probable cause to stop a motor 18 vehicle. Whren v. U.S., 517 U.S. 806, 810 (1996). When officers stop a car for probable 19 cause, the fact that they actually intend to investigate another crime for which they lack 20 probable cause is irrelevant—the “ulterior motive” does not “serve to strip the agents of their 21 legal justification” to conduct the initial stop. Id. at 813. While an ulterior motive does not 22 remove objective probable cause for a car stop, neither it nor the initial probable cause 23 provides limitless authority to detain passengers for unrelated crimes or civil violations. This 24 is because while “[t]here is probable cause to believe that the driver has committed a minor 25 vehicular offense, . . . there is no such reason to stop or detain the passengers.” Maryland v.
26 Wilson, 519 U.S. 408, 413 (1997).

27 For any detention to be valid under the Fourth Amendment, “[t]he scope of the 28

1 detention must be carefully tailored to its underlying justification.” Florida v. Royer, 460
2 U.S. 491, 500 (1983). Applied to the car stop context, this principle means that officers may 3 question a driver who has been lawfully stopped if the questioning does “not unreasonably 4 prolong the duration of the stop.” U.S. v. Turvin, 517 F.3d 1097, 1099, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008)
5 (when officer recognized driver as previously arrested drug dealer, asking for driver’s 6 consent to search a box in the vehicle that “look[ed] very odd” did not prolong the stop).
7 During this questioning, however, “unless the detainee’s answers provide the officer with 8 probable cause to arrest him, he must then be released.” Berkemer, 468 U.S. at 439–440.⁸

9 Vehicle passengers are legally “seized” based on the reasonable suspicion that 10 provided justification for the stop—an officer “need not have, in addition, cause to believe 11 any occupant of the vehicle is involved in criminal activity.” Lemon Montrea Johnson, 555 12 U.S. at 327. To question or search a passenger beyond the scope of investigating the cause 13 for the original stop, however, an officer needs suspicion particular to that passenger—for 14 example, in order to frisk a passenger, an officer needs reasonable suspicion independent of 15 the reason for the stop that “the person subjected to the frisk is armed and dangerous.” *Id.*⁹

16 Local law enforcement officers may therefore not detain vehicle passengers based 17 upon probable cause, or even actual knowledge, without more, that those passengers are not

18
19 ⁸ Defendants’ reliance on Muehler v. Mena, 544 U.S. 93 (2005) for the proposition 20 that “[a] traffic violation provides probable cause to stop the vehicle and to reasonably detain 21 a driver and other occupants of the vehicle,” is unavailing. (Doc. 413 at 5). In Muehler, there 22 was no traffic stop; rather, Mena was handcuffed and asked about her immigration status 23 while her house was searched for weapons pursuant to a valid warrant. Mueler, 544 U.S. at 24 96. The Supreme Court held that the detention was reasonable in light of the nature of the search, and that an interrogation that did not prolong the search did not constitute an independent Fourth Amendment seizure. The officers who asked about Mena’s immigration status were federal immigration officers. Id.

25 ⁹ The Fourth Circuit has held that, without extending the duration of the stop, officers 26 may direct very limited requests to passengers, writing that a “request for identification from 27 passengers falls within the purview of a lawful traffic stop and does not constitute a separate Fourth Amendment event.” U.S. v. Soriano-Jarquin, 492 F.3d 495, 500 (4th Cir. 2007).

1 lawfully in the United States, since such knowledge does not provide officers with reasonable 2 suspicion that the passengers are violating any law that local law enforcement officers can 3 enforce. Martinez-Medina, 2011 WL 855791, at *6. This prohibition holds true even when 4 the car has been reasonably stopped for other cause, such as a traffic violation, because such 5 cause provides “no such reason to stop or detain the passengers.” Wilson, 519 U.S. at 413.

6 Defendants, citing Terry and its progeny, claim that if an officer has reasonable 7 suspicion that a person has satisfied one significant element of a criminal statute, the officer 8 may stop that person to develop reasonable suspicion that the person has violated the other 9 elements. A line of Ninth Circuit cases has emphasized that since probable cause is an 10 objective standard relying upon the totality of the circumstances, an officer may have 11 probable cause to arrest or search when he does not have “probable cause for every element 12 of the offense.” U.S. v. McCarty, 648 F.3d 820, 839 (9th Cir. 2011) (When airport traveler
13 opened his bag and photographs of nude children fell out, TSA did not need probable cause 14 that the photographs met the precise definition of child pornography in order to have 15 probable cause to search bags further). Nevertheless, officers still need an “objectively 16 reasonable belief that [a person] has committed a crime” before they have probable cause to 17 proceed further. Id. Although “[p]robable cause does not require the same type of specific 18 evidence of each element of the offense as would be needed to support a conviction,” Adams
19 v. Williams, 407 U.S. 143, 149 (1972), officers must have some reliable information that a 20 person has committed a crime, usually including violating its key elements. See, e.g., Gasho 21 v. United States, 39 F.3d 1420, 1428 (9th Cir. 1994) (finding that while “an officer need not 22 have probable cause for every element of the offense . . . when specific intent is a required 23 element, the arresting officer must have probable cause for that element in order to 24 reasonably believe that a crime has occurred.”). Regardless of whether some crimes contain 25 some elements for which an officer need not have probable cause in order to have probable 26 cause that the crime has been committed, in the immigration context, “an alien’s ‘admission 27 of illegal presence . . . does not, without more, provide probable cause of the criminal 28

1 violation of illegal entry.” Martinez-Medina, 2011 WL 855791, at *6.

2 To justify a Terry stop, an officer must have reasonable suspicion that a crime is 3 about to be committed, and a person has not committed a crime if the necessary elements 4 have not been satisfied. Cf. In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 361 (1970) (To convict a person of 5 a crime, a prosecutor must “convince the trier of all the essential elements of guilt.”) (internal 6 quotation omitted). If the totality of the circumstances do not provide reasonable suspicion 7 that a person is about to commit or is committing a crime, then the officer cannot stop the 8 person. Moreover, an officer cannot conduct a Terry stop in order to acquire the reasonable 9 suspicion necessary to justify the stop itself; the “demand for specificity in the information 10 upon which police action is predicated is the central teaching of [the Supreme Court’s] 11 Fourth Amendment jurisprudence.” Terry, 392 U.S. at 22 n.18 (collecting cases).

12 Defendants also cite U.S. v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411 (1981), Scarborough v. Myles, 245 13 F.3d 1299 (11th Cir. 2001), and a number of cases in which officers frisked individuals for 14 weapons during a legally justified stop, including U.S. v. Orman, 486 F.3d 1170 (9th Cir.
15 2007), Lemon Monrea Johnson, and Terry itself. Cortez involved federal immigration 16 officers stopping a vehicle after an extended field investigation and overnight surveillance; 17 since federal immigration officers may stop vehicles based on reasonable suspicion that 18 passengers have violated federal civil immigration law, there were no criminal elements that 19 needed to be satisfied. U.S. v. Cortez, 449 U.S. at 421–22. Scarborough was a qualified 20 immunity case. In that case, the court held that Officer Myles had “arguable probable cause” 21 that defendants had committed of a crime, and therefore met the lower standard necessary 22 to be afforded qualified immunity. Scarborough, 245 F.3d at 1303. It in no way suggests that 23 a Terry stop is justified without reasonable suspicion that a crime has been committed, or that 24 essential elements can remain unsatisfied.¹⁰

25
26 ¹⁰ Cases detailing the standards for conducting a frisk are not relevant to this 27 complaint, and need not be discussed in detail.

1 As a matter of law, belief without more that a person is not legally authorized to be 2 in the country cannot constitute reasonable suspicion to believe that he or she has violated
3 the state human smuggling law. The Ninth Circuit has held that actual knowledge that a 4 person is not lawfully in the country does not provide probable cause that the person has,
5 additionally, crossed the border at an unauthorized place. Martinez-Medina, 2011 WL 6 855791, at *6. If an officer does not have reasonable suspicion that criminal activity is afoot, 7 he does not have reason to detain someone under Terry.

8 DISCUSSION

9 I. Legal Standard

10 Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings and supporting documents, viewed 11 in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, “show that there is no genuine issue as 12 to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” 13 FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c). A dispute is genuine “if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury 14 could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.” Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S.
15 242, 248 (9th Cir. 1986). In considering such evidence, “at the summary judgment stage the 16 judge’s function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter 17 but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial.” Id. at 249.

18 The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden to identify the 19 portions of the record “it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material 20 fact.” F.T.C. v. Stefanichick, 559 F.3d 924, 927 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Celotex Corp. v.
21 Cartrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986)). Should the moving party meet this burden, the non-22 moving party then must “set forth, by affidavit or as otherwise provided in Rule 56, specific 23 facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Horphang Research Ltd. v. Garcia, 475 24 F.3d 1029, 1035 (9th Cir. 2007) (internal quotations omitted). District courts “rely on the 25 nonmoving party to identify with reasonable particularity the evidence that precludes 26 summary judgment.” Keenan v. Allan, 91 F.3d 1275, 1279 (9th Cir. 1996).

27 Affidavits must be made “on personal knowledge, not information and belief” in order 28

1 to be considered at summary judgment. Taylor v. List, 880 F.2d 1040, 1046 n.3 (9th Cir.
2 1989). Expert testimony may be considered unless it consists of a “legal conclusion.” U.S.
3 v. Scholl, 166 F.3d 964, 973 (9th Cir. 1999). The Ninth Circuit “has refused to find a genuine 4 issue where the only evidence presented is uncorroborated and self-serving testimony.”
5 Villiarimo v. Aloha Island Air, Inc., 281 F.3d 1054, 1061 (9th Cir. 2002) (internal quotations 6 omitted).

7 II. Analysis

8 A. Search and Seizure Claims

9 A plaintiff does not have standing to seek injunctive relief, even if he has suffered 10 harm, unless that harm is accompanied by “continuing, present adverse effects.” O’Shea v.
11 Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 496 (1974). Continuing, present adverse effects may be found when 12 a plaintiff demonstrates that there is “a sufficient likelihood that he will again be wronged 13 in a similar way.” Lyons, 461 U.S. at 111. Standing for injunctive relief will not flow, 14 however, if an injury is “contingent upon [plaintiffs’] violating the law.” Spencer v. Kemna, 15 523 U.S. 1, 15 (1998). Plaintiffs have no standing to enjoin police conduct, therefore, if by 16 “conduct[ing] their activities within the law” they will avoid “exposure to the challenged 17 course of conduct.” Lyons, 461 U.S. at 103 (quoting O’Shea, 414 U.S. at 497). To have 18 standing to seek an injunction on their Fourth Amendment claims, Plaintiffs must present a 19 genuine question as to whether they are likely to be seized again in violation of the Fourth 20 Amendment, not merely that the traffic stops are conducted in a discriminatory fashion or are 21 pretextual efforts to enforce other law. See Whren v. U.S., 517 U.S. at 810.

22 In the unique circumstances of this case, Defendants’ assertions about the scope of 23 their authority to stop persons to investigate potential violations of the state smuggling statute 24 establish that plaintiffs are sufficiently likely to be seized in violation of the Fourth 25 Amendment to provide them with standing to seek injunctive relief. MCSO has conceded 26 that it has no authority, inherent or otherwise, to enforce federal civil immigration law, but 27 now claims the authority to detain persons it believes are not authorized to be in the country 28

1 based on its ability to enforce Arizona’s human smuggling statute. A.R.S. § 13-2319.
2 Defendants claim, therefore, that their authority to stop people to investigate violations of the 3 state human smuggling statute is the same as a federal immigration officer’s authority to 4 enforce federal civil immigration law. In supplemental briefing and at oral argument, 5 Defendants asserted that MCSO officers could briefly detain people “based only upon a 6 reasonable suspicion, without more, that the person is not legally present within the United 7 States.” (Doc. 488 at 17).

8 The fact that a person is unlawfully present, without more, does not provide officers 9 with reasonable suspicion that the person is currently being smuggled for profit, nor does it 10 provide probable cause that the person was at some point in the past smuggled for profit. Cf.
11 Martinez-Medina, 2011 WL 855791, at *6. To the extent that Defendants claim that the 12 human smuggling statute, or any Arizona or federal criminal law, authorizes them to detain 13 people based solely on the knowledge, let alone the reasonable suspicion, that those people 14 are not authorized to be in the country, they are incorrect as a matter of law.

15 The likelihood that any particular named Plaintiff will again be stopped in the same 16 way may not be high. However, if MCSO detains people, as they claim a right to do, without 17 reasonable suspicion that they have violated essential elements of a criminal law—either 18 state or federal—exposure to that policy is both itself an ongoing harm and evidence that 19 there is “sufficient likelihood” that Plaintiffs’ rights will be violated again. Lyons, 461 U.S.
20 at 111. Although some MCSO officers were certified under 287(g) to enforce civil provisions 21 of the federal immigration law during the incidents that gave rise to the complaint, since that 22 authority has been revoked they may no longer do so. In Lyons itself, the court wrote that a 23 victim of police misconduct could seek an injunction if he could show that department 24 officials “ordered or authorized police officers to act in such manner.” Id. at 106 (emphasis 25 added). MCSO affirmatively alleges that its officers are authorized to stop individuals based 26 only on reasonable suspicion or probable cause that a person is not authorized to be in the 27 United States. This assertion establishes the standing of all named Plaintiffs to seek 28

1 injunctive relief. Further, because this assertion is wrong as a matter of law, named Plaintiffs 2 (and all members of the putative class) are entitled to partial summary judgment on their 3 Fourth Amendment claims, to the extent that Defendants are detaining persons without 4 reasonable suspicion that the state human smuggling statute has been violated. Defendants 5 need not be enjoined from enforcing federal civil immigration law because they concede that 6 they have no authority to enforce such law.

7 To be granted injunctive relief, a plaintiff must establish four elements. A plaintiff 8 must establish “that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable 9 harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and 10 that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Nat’t Res. Def. Council, 555 U.S. 7, 20 11 (2008); see FED. R. CIV. P. 65. The loss of constitutional rights “unquestionably constitutes 12 irreparable injury.” Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976). The balance of equities and 13 public interest both favor enforcing class members’ Fourth Amendment rights. Injunctive 14 relief is appropriate.

15 To the extent that named Plaintiffs claim a right to additional injunctive relief on 16 summary judgment based on the facts of their individual detentions, those detentions are 17 discussed below.

18 1. Ortega-Melendres

19 On September 19, and September 22, 2007, undercover MCSO deputies went to a 20 church in Cave Creek posing as day laborers. (Doc. 433, Ex. 139). The officers discovered 21 that the church maintained a sign-in sheet for those looking for work “in order to fairly 22 distribute the jobs among the day laborers.” (Id.). An email to Lieutenant Joseph Sousa of 23 MCSO’s Human Smuggling Unit (“HSU”) detailing the officers’ undercover operation 24 concluded that “[o]n both days, there was no information discovered pertaining to forced 25 labor, human smuggling or possible ‘drop houses.’” (Id.). On September 27, MCSO 26 conducted an operation “related exclusively to stopping for probable cause following traffic 27 violations only those vehicles that were observed to have picked up people congregating at 28

1 the church property and that had left the property.” (Doc. 453 ¶ 172).

2 Plaintiff Manuel de Jesus Ortega-Melendres, a Mexican national who was legally in 3 the United States at the time, along with two other men, entered a vehicle from the parking 4 lot. (Doc. 413, Ex. 1 ¶ 14). Deputy DiPietro was participating in the operation, which he 5 understood to be focused on “a church parking lot that had day laborers working from it or 6 being picked up by people.” (Doc. 413, Ex. 4 at 46, ln 22–25). Officers of the HSU who were 7 monitoring the church contacted Deputy DiPietro and told him to follow the vehicle Ortega-
8 Melendres had entered and attempt to develop probable cause to stop it. (Doc. 413, Ex. 1 ¶ 9 15). DiPietro followed the truck for a mile and a half, and then pulled it over for traveling 10 above the speed limit. (Doc. 422 ¶ 177). DiPietro spoke to the driver of the vehicle and to the 11 passengers, and formed, in his own words, “reasonable suspicion from that they were day 12 laborers and here illegally.” (Doc. 413, Ex. 4 at 49, ln 18–20). When asked whether he 13 believed that the passengers had committed any state crime, he stated, “I’m not sure what the 14 employer sanction laws and when they came into effect or not. But I had reason to believe 15 that they were here illegally.” (Doc. 413, Ex. 4 at 49–50).¹¹ When asked specifically if he was 16 concerned about human smuggling, he stated, “There was a concern of—when I found out 17 that this church was doing this, you know, allowing day laborers to be worked out, there’s 18 a possibility that it could have been some type of human smuggling type of—some type of 19 criminal activity could have been going on out of that parking lot.” (Doc. 413, Ex. 4 at 120, 20 ln 6–11) (emphasis added). DiPietro decided not to give the driver of the vehicle a traffic 21 ticket, and summoned Deputy Rangel, who was 287(g) certified and spoke Spanish, to 22 investigate the immigration status of the passengers of the truck, including Ortega-23 Melendres. (Doc. 413, Ex. 1 ¶¶ 20–22). Defendants and Plaintiffs agree that Melendres

24
25 ¹¹ As discussed above, Arizona’s employer sanctions law contains no provision for 26 penalties of any sort levied on employees, rather than employers, and specifically exempts 27 independent contractors from its definition of “employee.” See A.R.S §§ 23-211, 212, 28 212.01.

1 provided Rangel with his tourist visa, but disagree as to whether he also provided his I-94
2 form. (Doc. 456 ¶ 26). The driver was allowed to leave with a warning.¹² (Doc. 422 ¶ 178).
3 After between fifteen and twenty-one minutes of questioning, Ortega-Melendres and the 4 other passengers were taken to an MCSO substation, where they were detained for roughly 5 two hours, and then transported to an ICE Detention and Removal Office, where Ortega-6 Melendres was held for six more hours. (Doc. 453 ¶ 185). After he was seen by an ICE agent, 7 Ortega-Melendres was released. (Doc. 453 ¶ 184).

8 It is not clear from the record that the HSU officers who first radioed Deputy DiPietro 9 were themselves certified under the 287(g) program to enforce federal immigration law.
10 Assuming that they were, they would only have had reasonable suspicion to stop the vehicle 11 if the facts and reasonable inferences drawn from those facts could “reasonably warrant 12 suspicion that the vehicles contain[ed] aliens who may be illegally in the country.” Brignoni- 13 Ponce, 422 U.S. at 884. They did not stop the vehicle themselves, and instead requested that 14 Deputy DiPietro do so.

15 Defendants assert that in training 287(g) officers, ICE informs them that race or 16 apparent ancestry may be used as one factor in evaluating whether officers have reasonable 17 suspicion to stop an individual, although it cannot be considered the sole factor. (Doc. 452 18 at 15; Doc. 453, Ex. 9 at 19, ln 10–21). Whether or not such information is provided by ICE 19 to local law enforcement officers during their 287(g) training, the law in the Ninth Circuit 20 is clear: “Hispanic appearance is of little or no use in determining which particular 21 individuals among the vast Hispanic populace should be stopped by law enforcement 22 officials on the lookout for illegal aliens.” Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d at 1134. Defendants 23 cite Montero-Camargo for the proposition that the courts do not “preclude the use of racial 24 or ethnic appearance as one factor relevant to reasonable suspicion or probable cause,” but 25

26 ¹² To the extent that Defendants now assert that Deputy DiPietro detained Orgeta 27 Melendres pursuant to his authority to enforce Arizona’s human smuggling statute, they offer 28 no explanation why he did not also detain the driver for violating that same statute.

1 fail to quote the sentence in its entirety, which limits this use to “when a particular suspect
2 has been identified as having a specific racial or ethnic appearance.” Id. at 1134 n.21 3 (emphasis added). Defendants at no time claim that Ortega-Melendres matched a particular 4 description of a suspect of any specific crime before his vehicle was stopped. Assuming that 5 Ortega-Melendres was dressed as a member of a work crew, his appearance would be 6 inadequate to justify a stop. Manzo-Jurado, 457 F.3d at 932.

7 In addition to his dress and his appearance, Ortega-Melendres gathered at an area 8 where day laborers were known to congregate and entered a vehicle with others from the 9 same location. The Ninth Circuit has yet to consider whether this type of behavior provides 10 officers with reasonable suspicion to investigate immigration status, and it is not necessary
11 to consider that question in this Order. The HSU officers who observed Ortega-Melendres 12 enter the vehicle did not stop the vehicle themselves to determine his immigration status; 13 rather they requested that Deputy DiPietro follow the vehicle and develop probable cause to 14 stop it.

15 Deputy DiPietro stopped the vehicle for traveling 34 miles per hour in a 25 mile per 16 hour zone, but Plaintiffs’ claim does not rest on whether he had probable cause to effect the 17 initial traffic stop. DiPietro himself acknowledges that he dismissed the driver but called 18 Deputy Rangel to investigate the immigration status of the vehicle’s passengers because “I 19 had reasonable suspicion . . . that they were day laborers and here illegally.” (Doc. 453, Ex.
20 13 at 49, ln 18–21). In their original briefing on the pending motion, Defendants conceded 21 that “Deputy DiPietro had no reason to believe that any passengers of the truck had 22 committed any violation of criminal law.” (Doc. 453 ¶ 176). In their supplemental briefing, 23 however, in which the Court asked them to respond to specific questions concerning 24 Plaintiffs’ Fourth Amendment claims, they now assert that DiPietro had formed a reasonable 25 suspicion that Ortega-Melendres had violated the human smuggling statute and was 26
27
28

1 conspiring to smuggle himself.¹³ Even assuming that Ortega-Melendres's behavior or 2 DiPietro's conversation with the driver provided reasonable suspicion that Ortega-Melendres 3 was in the United States without authorization, no evidence has been offered suggesting that 4 DiPietro had reasonable suspicion that any other elements of a federal or state crime had been 5 satisfied. See Martinez-Medina, ___ F.3d ___, 2011 WL 855791, at *6 (2011). Previous 6 undercover work by MCSO had revealed no evidence of human smuggling or drop houses, 7 and there is no evidence to suggest probable cause that Ortega-Melendres had previously 8 been transported for profit or commercial purpose. (Doc. 433, Ex. 139). DiPietro's statement, 9 based on no evidence in the record, that the church might possibly have been engaged in 10 human smuggling or other undefined criminal activity, constitutes merely a "inchoate and 11 unparticularized suspicion or 'hunch'" and did not objectively provide him reasonable 12 suspicion that Ortega-Melendres in particular was committing, or conspiring to commit, any 13 crime. U.S. v. Sokolow, 490 U.S. 1, 7 (1989) (quoting Terry, 392 U.S. at 27).

14 Further, that the stop itself may have been justified did not provide reasonable 15 suspicion to detain Ortega-Melendres. Officer DiPietro was justified under Whren in 16 stopping the car, and was permitted to question the driver without reasonable suspicion so 17 long as he did "not unreasonably prolong the duration of the stop." Turvin, 517 F.3d at 1099.
18 During that questioning, however, "unless the detainee's answers provide the officer with 19 probable cause to arrest him, he must then be released." Berkemer, 468 U.S. at 439-440.

20 Defendants argue that "it was completely proper for MCSO deputies to make traffic 21 stops of motorists under Arizona law and then call for a 287(g) certified deputy to determine 22

23 ¹³ To the extent that they also claim, relying on Martinez-Medina, that Deputy 24 DiPietro could have reasonably concluded that unauthorized presence in the United States 25 is a crime, DiPietro's reasonable but wrong belief would be relevant only in determining 26 whether to afford him qualified immunity in a suit for damages. Whether he in fact violated 27 the Fourth Amendment is a purely objective question. See Whren, 517 U.S. 806, 813 28 (discussing cases that "foreclose any argument that the constitutional reasonableness of traffic stops depends on the actual motivations of the individual officers involved").

1 if someone in the stopped vehicle might be unlawfully in the country.” (Doc. 452 at 11). For 2 this proposition, they cite to the deposition of Alonzo Pena, the Special Agent in Charge for 3 ICE Phoenix. In his deposition, however, Special Agent Pena states that a local officer may 4 call a federal or 287(g) officer to check a detainee’s immigration status, but “that he has to 5 have the legal basis to detain that person on his own state charges.” (Doc. 453, Ex. 1 at 98, 6 In 8–9). Of course, state officers may summon federal officers to investigate the immigration 7 status of those who have been convicted of state crimes. A.R.S. § 11-1051(C)–(F). However, 8 MCSO had no legal basis under state criminal law on which to detain Ortega-Melendres or 9 the other passengers while Deputy DiPietro called Deputy Rangel, nor to detain Ortega-10 Melendres once MCSO allowed the driver to leave. Passengers in a vehicle are technically 11 seized when the vehicle is stopped, and thus may challenge a stop under the Fourth 12 Amendment. Brendlin v. California, 551 U.S. 249, 259 (2007). Any argument, however, that 13 the probable cause used to stop the vehicle provided DiPietro with reasonable suspicion to 14 detain and investigate the passengers in that vehicle is pure bootstrapping. Id. at 413 (“There 15 is probable cause to believe that the driver has committed a minor vehicular offense, but 16 there is no such reason to stop or detain the passengers.”). DiPietro had no reasonable 17 suspicion that Ortega-Melendres and the other passengers were committing, or probable 18 cause that they had committed, any state or federal crime.

19 DiPietro’s stated reason for detaining the passengers was that he suspected that they 20 were in the country without authorization. As a 287(g) certified officer, he had the authority 21 to detain them if this suspicion was reasonable. 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g). Certain material facts 22 that would resolve this question are currently still in dispute. For example, the parties dispute 23 whether the driver provided DiPietro with information adequate to support reasonable 24 suspicion that Ortega-Melendres was not in the country legally, and they dispute whether 25 Ortega-Melendres produced documentation verifying his status to Deputy Rangel. (Doc. 413, 26 Ex. 1 ¶ 18; Doc. 456 ¶ 26). Therefore, summary judgment in favor of Ortega-Melendres is 27 appropriate to the extent that it enjoins MCSO from detaining persons for further 28

1 investigation without reasonable suspicion that a crime has been or is being committed. On 2 Ortega-Melendres's underlying claims, however, granting either party summary judgment 3 would be inappropriate at this juncture.

4 2. Plaintiffs Jessika and David Rodriguez—Claims Two and Three

5 On December 7, 2007, David and Jessika Rodriguez were driving on Bartlett Dam
6 Road when they were stopped by Deputy Matthew Ratcliffe of the MCSO. (Doc. 422 ¶ 7 186–87). The road had been closed by the Maricopa County Department of Transportation 8 and a “Road Closed” sign had been posted on it. (Doc. 413, Ex. 1 ¶ 40; Doc 413, Ex. 9). Mr.
9 and Mrs. Rodriguez claim that they approached in a manner that would not have allowed 10 them to see the sign. (Doc. 453 ¶ 189). Deputy Ratcliffe pulled over the vehicle. (Doc. 422 11 ¶ 187). Although the parties disagree as to whether Deputy Ratcliffe asked Mr. Rodriguez 12 for his social security card, it is undisputed that he issued Mr. Rodriguez a citation. (Doc. 453 13 ¶ 193). Deputy Ratcliffe had stopped other vehicles that day; he states that he turned the 14 drivers over to the Tonto National Forest Rangers, while Mr. and Mrs. Rodriguez state the 15 other drivers were only given warnings, not citations. (Doc. 453 ¶¶ 197–98).

16 Since the Rodriguezes were driving on a road that had been closed by the Department 17 of Transportation, Deputy Ratcliffe had probable cause to stop them, whether or not they had 18 seen the sign. See Whren, 517 U.S. at 810. For the purposes of Defendants' motion for 19 summary judgment, it must be assumed that Deputy Ratcliffe asked the Rodriguezes for a 20 social security card, not merely for a social security number as Defendants allege. (Doc. 456 21 ¶ 52). Furthermore, for the purposes of this motion, Plaintiffs' claim that requesting a social 22 security card or number is not standard practice within MCSO when issuing traffic citations 23 may be presumed. (Doc. 422 ¶ 195). Nevertheless, when a traffic stop is supported by 24 probable cause, “whether the officer's conduct deviated materially from usual police 25 practices” is immaterial for the purposes of Fourth Amendment analysis. Whren, 517 U.S.
26 at 814. The MCSO's Arizona Traffic Ticket and Complaint form has a space in which to 27 enter a suspect's social security number, and a social security card is a commonly understood 28

1 document for verifying that number. (Doc. 413, Ex. 7). Plaintiffs offer no evidence
2 suggesting that the Rodriguez stop took any longer than it would have had Deputy Ratcliffe
3 not requested the card. Their claim that Deputy Ratcliffe enforced the traffic laws selectively 4 in choosing their vehicle to stop and ticket does not bear on the Fourth Amendment analysis.
5 Whren, 517 U.S. at 813. Moreover, their claim that Deputy Ratcliffe followed their vehicle 6 after issuing a summons does not state a Fourth Amendment claim, since people “traveling 7 in an automobile on public thoroughfares ha[ve] no reasonable expectation of privacy in 8 [their] movements from one place to another.” U.S. v. Knotts, 460 U.S. 276, 281 (1983).

9 Therefore, partial summary judgment in favor of the Rodriguezes is appropriate to the 10 extent that it enjoins MCSO from detaining persons for further investigation without 11 reasonable suspicion that a crime has been or is being committed. On their remaining 12 underlying claims, however, the Court grants summary judgment to Defendants.

13 3. Plaintiffs Manuel Nieto and Velia Meraz—Claims Two and Three

14 On March 28, 2008, MCSO officers were conducting special operations in North 15 Phoenix. (Doc. 453 ¶ 200). On that date, Manuel Nieto and Velia Meraz drove into a 16 convenience store where MCSO Deputy Charley Armendariz was standing by another 17 vehicle that he had stopped. (Doc. 422 ¶ 201). Plaintiffs and Defendants disagree about the 18 details of the encounter between Armendariz, Nieto, and Meraz, but agree that Deputy 19 Armendariz ordered Nieto and Meraz to leave and that he radioed for backup. (Doc. 453 ¶ 20 202). By the time backup officers arrived, Nieto and Meraz had in fact left the vicinity of the 21 convenience store. (Doc. 453 ¶ 203). The backup officers pursued Nieto and Meraz’s vehicle, 22 which pulled into the parking lot of a nearby auto repair shop owned by Nieto’s father. (Doc.
23 456 ¶ 87). Plaintiffs and Defendants dispute much of what Nieto, Meraz, and the officers did 24 during the course of this second encounter, but agree that Deputy Michael Kikes forcibly 25 removed Mr. Nieto from the vehicle and handcuffed him while checking his identification.
26 (Doc. 453 ¶ 212). Mr. Nieto was released from custody without being charged. (Doc. 453 ¶ 27 213).

1 Summary judgment on Nieto and Meraz’s claim would be improper because many 2 material facts are in dispute. (Doc. 456 ¶¶ 70–72, 74–83, 87, 92). Defendants and Plaintiffs 3 disagree about Nieto and Meraz’s behavior when they first pulled into the convenience store 4 near Deputy Armandariz. (Doc. 456 ¶¶ 70–72). They disagree about whether Nieto and 5 Meraz immediately obeyed Deputy Armandariz’s order to leave the area. (Doc. 456 ¶¶ 6 74–76). They disagree about the nature of the later stop by Deputy Kikes and about Nieto’s 7 behavior before he was forcibly removed from the vehicle. (Doc. 456 ¶¶ 87, 92). The parties 8 offer drastically different versions of the stop, each supported by deposition testimony. The 9 disputed facts are material to the question of whether the MCSO officers had probable cause 10 for the initial stop, whether they had probable cause to remove Nieto from the car, and 11 whether they had probable cause to handcuff him.

12 Therefore, partial summary judgment in favor of Nieto and Meraz is appropriate to 13 the extent that it enjoins MCSO from detaining persons for further investigation without 14 reasonable suspicion that a crime has been or is being committed. On their underlying claims, 15 however, granting either party summary judgment would be inappropriate at this juncture.

16 B. Discrimination Claims—Counts One and Four

17 Just as Plaintiffs needed to demonstrate standing to seek injunctive relief on their 18 Fourth Amendment Claims, so too must they demonstrate a “sufficient likelihood” that their 19 Equal Protection rights will be violated again in order to seek equitable relief on Claim One 20 and Claim Four. Lyons, 461 U.S. at 111. Courts have consistently held that a racially 21 discriminatory law enforcement policy constitutes ongoing harm, and thereby supports 22 standing to seek an injunction. See LaDuke v. Nelson, 762 F.2d 1318, 1326 (9th Cir. 1985); 23 Thomas v. Cty of L.A., 978 F.2d 504, 508 (9th Cir. 1992); Rodriguez v. California Highway
24 Patrol, 89 F. Supp. 2d 1131 (N.D. Cal. 2000); Committee for Immigrant Rights of Sonoma
25 v. Cty. of Sonoma, 644 F. Supp. 2d 1177 (N.D. Cal. 2009). Plaintiffs demonstrate a sufficient 26 likelihood that they will again be wronged when they “do not have to induce a police 27 encounter before the possibility of injury can occur” because stops are the result of an 28

1 “unconstitutional pattern of conduct.” LaDuke, 762 F.2d at 1326. Injunctive relief is 2 appropriate when plaintiffs show that police misconduct “is purposefully aimed at minorities 3 and that such misconduct was condoned and tacitly authorised by department policy makers.”
4 Thomas, 978 F.2d at 508. A plaintiff challenging law enforcement policies on Equal 5 Protection grounds must show “both that the . . . system had a discriminatory effect and that 6 it was motivated by a discriminatory purpose.” Wayte v. U.S., 470 U.S. 598, 608 (1985); see
7 also Village of Arlington Heights v. Metro. Housing Dev. Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 264–65
8 (1977) (“[O]fficial action will not be held unconstitutional solely because it results in a 9 racially disproportionate impact.”). Likewise, Title VI authorizes a private right of action
10 only in cases involving intentional discrimination. Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 280 11 (2001). Consideration of race need not be the “dominant or primary” purpose of a policy for 12 it to be discriminatory. Arlington Heights, 429 U.S. at 265. Instead, a finder of fact must 13 determine whether a discriminatory purpose was “a motivating factor” in the policy. Id. at 14 266. Plaintiffs may demonstrate that a policy was intentionally discriminatory if they can 15 show that it “was based in part on reports that referred to explicit racial characteristics.” 16 Flores v. Pierce, 617 F.2d 1386, 1389 (9th Cir. 1980) (Kennedy, J.). Frequent stops of 17 minorities can serve as evidence of a discriminatory policy, but the Ninth Circuit has held 18 that a single stop, even if discriminatory, does not alone provide sufficient evidence of a 19 discriminatory policy to support standing to seek an injunction. Hodgers-Durgin v. de la 20 Vina, 199 F. 3d 1037, 1044 (9th Cir. 1999).

21 Plaintiffs here provide evidence from which a finder of fact could conclude that 22 MCSO racially profiles Latinos. Sheriff Arpaio has made public statements that a fact finder 23 could interpret as endorsing racial profiling, such as stating that, even lacking 287(g) 24 authority, his officers can detain people based upon “their speech, what they look like, if they 25 look like they came from another country.” (Doc. 426, Ex. 4 at 274). Moreover, he 26 acknowledges that MCSO provides no training to reduce the risk of racial profiling, stating 27 “if we do not racial profile, why would I do a training program?” (Doc. 426, Ex. 4 at 41).

1 In addition, Sheriff Arpaio keeps a file containing letters and news clippings that a 2 reasonable fact finder could determine advocate or support racial profiling. Sample 3 sentiments include, “Stopping Mexicans to make sure they are legal is not racist,” “If you 4 have dark skin, then you have dark skin! Unfortunately, that is the look of the Mexican 5 illegal,” and a person who stated that her mother, who had been profiled during World War
6 II, believed that profiling was “the right thing to do.” (Doc. 427, Exs. 22, 23, 36). Arpaio 7 wrote personal thank-you letters to a number of the authors. (Doc. 435, Exs. 184–85). In 8 addition, the file contains clippings of letters to the editors of local papers advocating racial 9 profiling that included the following statements: “Call it ‘racial profiling’ but if there are 12 10 million illegals that fit a ‘profile’ then it is what it is,” “I’d say they should be looking for 11 Mexicans,” and “Hooray for profiling.” (Doc 427, Ex. 18; Doc. 428, Ex. 37). Arpaio also 12 underlined key phrases in an email regarding this case which referred to the Honorable Mary 13 Murguia, the original judge in this matter, as “the ‘token’ Hispanic female judge that sits in 14 your so-call [sic] ‘federal’ court in Sand Land,” and suggested that she had made rulings in 15 this case in exchange for “Dinero? Favors? Human smuggling money?” He ordered three 16 copies of the email made for himself, and had it forwarded to four other staff members. (Doc.
17 427, Ex. 16).

18 The available documentary evidence could further lead a reasonable finder of fact to 19 conclude that MCSO’s special operations were conducted in response to citizen requests that 20 it engage in law enforcement operations based on race. The department received a number 21 of citizen communications asking MCSO to conduct special operations in places where the 22 writers described Latinos congregating, but did not provide evidence of a crime. (Doc. 428, 23 Exs. 25–26, 28). The letters were forwarded, sometimes by Sheriff Arpaio, to people who 24 planned the special operations, among them Chief Brian Sands, with annotations that 25 included phrases such as “for our operations,” and “I will be going to Mesa.” (Id.). MCSO 26 subsequently conducted special operations in the areas described by the letter writers and the 27 Sheriff’s annotations. (Doc. 453 ¶¶ 65–68). Chief Sands stated in a deposition that if Sheriff 28

1 Arpaio instructed him to conduct special operations in a particular location, he would do so.
2 (Doc. 453, Ex. 14 at 75, In 17). In addition, MCSO officers, including officers associated 3 with the special operations, circulated emails that compared Mexicans to dogs, ridiculed
4 stereotypical Mexican accents, and portrayed Mexicans as drunks. (Doc. 431, Exs. 96, 103, 5 105). From the totality of this evidence, along with the adverse inferences that the finder of 6 fact will be permitted to make at trial, it would be possible for a fact finder to conclude that 7 the MCSO engaged in an intentional policy of racial discrimination.

8 A finder of fact here could determine that MCSO engaged in a policy that had both 9 a discriminatory effect and a discriminatory intent. Defendants challenge Plaintiffs' expert 10 report supporting discriminatory effect, but fail to show that no reasonable fact finder could 11 credit it. (Doc. 424; Doc. 453 ¶ 233). If a fact finder determines that MCSO had a policy of 12 conducting special operations solely in response to citizen complaints that referred to racial 13 characteristics rather than reports of crime, as it could based on this evidence, MCSO 14 engaged in intentional discrimination. Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 433 (1984) (“Private 15 biases may be outside the reach of the law, but the law cannot, directly or indirectly, give 16 them effect.”); see also U.S. v. City of Yonkers, 96 F.3d 600, 612 (2nd Cir. 1996) (“Even 17 assuming . . . that the actions of the municipal officials are only responsive . . . the Equal 18 Protection Clause does not permit such actions where racial animus is a significant fact or 19 in the community position to which the city is responding.”). Cf. Watkins v. U.S. Army, 875 20 F.2d 699, 730 (9th Cir. 1989) (“[E]qual protection doctrine does not permit notions of 21 majoritarian morality to serve as compelling justification for laws that discriminate against 22 suspect classes.”).

23 Further, if a fact finder determines the MCSO operations were conducted based upon 24 the citizen emails and as described publicly by Sheriff Arpaio even after MCSO lost its 25 287(g) authority, Plaintiffs would not be able to prevent being stopped by “conduct[ing] their 26 activities within the law.” Lyons, 461 U.S. at 103. They could invite investigation by 27 speaking Spanish in restaurants, by dressing like “day laborers,” or by looking like “they 28

1 came from another country.” (Doc. 428, Exs. 25–26, 28; Doc. 426, Ex. 4 at 274, ln 23).
2 Moreover, the fact that the individual Plaintiffs have not been stopped again during the 3 course of this litigation does not preclude standing to seek injunctive relief. In Hodgers-
4 Durgin, the plaintiffs drove “every day” through a region in which INS officers were 5 patrolling “all over the place.” 199 F.3d at 1044. They lacked standing not because they had 6 only been stopped once in ten years, but more precisely because a single stop provided no 7 evidence that INS had a policy of racial profiling. Id. They had produced no additional 8 evidence that INS racially profiled anyone, and the single stop, even if improper, did not 9 demonstrate that a policy existed. As discussed above, Plaintiffs here have presented 10 sufficient evidence aside from the stops themselves.

11 If such a policy exists, it presents a “sufficient likelihood” that the named Plaintiffs 12 will suffer ongoing harm. Continued, ongoing harm results from “a pattern or practice of 13 constitutional violations or policies promoting constitutional violations, including racial 14 profiling.” Committee for Immigrant Rights, 644 F. Supp. 2d at 1195 (N.D. Cal 2009); see 15 also Thomas, 978 F.2d at 508. The named Plaintiffs have standing to seek injunctive relief 16 for their Equal Protection claims.

17 Given the fact that the Plaintiffs involved in the stops have standing, it is not 18 necessary to determine whether Somos America has standing as well. “The general rule 19 applicable to federal court suits with multiple plaintiffs is that once the court determines that 20 one of the plaintiffs has standing, it need not decide the standing of the others.” Preminger 21 v. Peake, 552 F.3d 757, 764 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Leonard v. Clark, 12 F.3d 885, 888 (9th 22 Cir. 1993)).

23 The fact that Plaintiffs have demonstrated that there is a genuine issue of material fact 24 as to whether MCSO has a racial profiling policy not only grants them standing, but 25 precludes a finding in favor of Defendants’ summary judgment motion with regards to Claim 26 One and Claim Four. However, it would be equally improper to find for Plaintiffs at this 27 stage. Defendants allege that they do not consider race when making traffic stops or deciding 28

1 where to conduct special operations. Both Chief Sands and Lieutenant Sousa state that the 2 operations are conducted based upon multiple criteria, including crime data, rather than 3 solely on citizen complaints. (Doc. 453, Ex. 14 at 79, ln 14–22; Doc. 453, Ex. 5 at 88, ln 4 17–22). While the deposition statements by MCSO deputies that they had alternate reasons 5 for conducting operations cannot form the sole basis for granting summary judgment in their 6 favor, Villiarimo, 281 F.3d at 1061 (no genuine issue exists when “the only evidence 7 presented is uncorroborated and self-serving testimony”) (internal quotations omitted), intent 8 to discriminate is required to establish an equal protection violation, and the states of mind
9 of MCSO officers is therefore relevant to Claims One and Four. The officers’ statements 10 about their intent raise sufficient issues of material fact to defeat Plaintiffs’ motion for 11 summary judgment. Lieutenant Sousa, for example, claims that complaints of people 12 stepping into the street and littering, while not mentioned in the MCSO’s undercover 13 investigation of the Cave Creek church, were relevant factors in deciding to conduct special 14 operations there on September 27, 2007. (Doc. 453, Ex. 5 at 100, ln 8–13). Determining 15 whether MCSO was relying in some degree upon the citizen complaints that contained no 16 description of criminal activity, and therefore had a policy of racial discrimination, “demands 17 a sensitive inquiry into such circumstantial and direct evidence of intent as may be 18 available.” Arlington Heights, 429 U.S. at 266. Such an inquiry is best conducted by a finder 19 of fact at trial, not by the court at summary judgment. See Sluimer v. Verity, Inc., 606 F. 3d 20 584, 587 (9th Cir. 2010) (“Credibility determination, the weighing of the evidence, and the 21 drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are . . . not those of a judge . . . ruling on a 22 motion for summary judgment.”) (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255).

23 C. Class Certification

24 Plaintiffs move for class certification on all of their claims. A class may not be certified 25 unless it meets each of the four requirements of Rule 23(a), ordinarily referred to as 26 numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a).
27 In addition, a class action must satisfy at least one of the three requirements of Rule 23(b), one 28

1 of which is that “the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply 2 generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is 3 appropriate regarding the class as a whole.” FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(2). The party seeking 4 certification bears the burden of demonstrating that it has met all of these requirements, and 5 “the trial court must conduct a ‘rigorous analysis’” to determine whether it has met that 6 burden. Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., 253 F.3d 1180, 1186 (9th Cir. 2001) (quoting 7 Valentino v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 97 F.3d 1227, 1233 (9th Cir. 1996)). Defendants claim that 8 class certification is not appropriate because Plaintiffs lack standing to seek injunctive relief 9 and because their claims fail as a matter of law. (Doc. 444 at 6–7). As discussed above, the 10 named Plaintiffs have established that they have standing to seek injunctive relief on their 11 Search and Seizure claims because MCSO has publicly stated that it may stop persons based 12 solely on a belief that they are not legally present in the country, and on their Equal Protection 13 claims because they have brought forth evidence suggesting that MCSO engages in a policy 14 or practice of racial profiling. LaDuke, 762 F.2d at 1326. Should it be determined after trial 15 that Plaintiffs lack standing to seek injunctive relief on any claim, the class may then be de-16 certified or partially de-certified. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(c)(1)(C).

17 Defendants do not dispute that Plaintiffs’ proposed class is sufficiently numerous, but 18 claim that Plaintiffs have not demonstrated commonality, typicality, or adequacy of 19 representation. (Doc. 444 at 7–13). They further claim that Plaintiffs have not demonstrated 20 that the class satisfies the requirements of Rule 23(b)(3). (Doc. 444 at 13–14). Finally, 21 Defendants claim that the proposed class is overbroad. (Doc. 444 at 14–16).

22 To satisfy the commonality prong, class members need not allege that they “have all 23 suffered a violation of the same provision of law,” but their claims “must depend upon a 24 common contention—for example, the assertion of discriminatory bias on the part of the 25 same supervisor.” Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S.Ct. 2541, 2551 (2011). Although 26 the factual circumstances of the individual stops involving the named Plaintiffs differ, they 27 claim generally that MCSO has a policy of racial profiling, in violation of the Fourteenth 28

1 Amendment, which leads officers to detain individuals without reasonable suspicion that they 2 committed a crime, in violation of the Fourth Amendment. (Doc. 26 ¶ 2–4). In a civil rights 3 suit, “commonality is satisfied where the lawsuit challenges a system-wide practice or policy
4 that affects all of the putative class members.” Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 868 (9th
5 Cir. 2001), abrogated on other grounds by Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499 (2005)
6 (citing LaDuke, 762 F.2d at 1332). As other courts have noted, commonality in cases alleging 7 racial profiling is satisfied when “the injuries complained of by the named plaintiffs allegedly 8 resulted from the same unconstitutional practice or policy that allegedly injured or will injure 9 the proposed class members.” Daniels v. City of New York, 198 F.R.D. 409, 418 (S.D.N.Y.
10 2001).

11 Likewise, differences in the subjective motivations between MCSO officers conducting 12 stops does not defeat typicality of claims alleging a departmental policy of violating 13 constitutional rights, whether under the Fourth or the Fourteenth Amendments. “In assessing 14 typicality, the court considers ‘the nature of the claim or defense of the class representative, 15 and not . . . the specific facts from which it arose or the relief sought.’” Winkler v. DTE, Inc., 16 205 F.R.D. 235, 241 (D. Ariz. 2001) (quoting Hanon v. Dataproducts Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 17 508 (9th Cir. 1992)). Defendants further argue that the individual claims are subject to unique 18 defenses because some officers were acting pursuant to their authority under 287(g) of the 19 INA. (Doc. 444 at 12). It is true that state officers acting pursuant to 287(g) “shall be 20 considered to be acting under color of Federal authority for purposes of determining the 21 liability, and immunity from suit, of the officer or employee in a civil action brought under 22 Federal or State law,” but acting under color of federal law does not provide them an adequate 23 defense to alleged Constitutional violations. 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g)(8) (2006); see generally
24 Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 25 (1971). At any rate, no MCSO officer has had 287(g) authority since October of 2009, and 26 none could assert this defense going forward; since Plaintiffs seek only prospective relief, 27 these potential defenses are irrelevant. Moreover, MCSO concedes that it believes it has legal 28

1 authority to detain persons, if only briefly, to investigate possible criminal violations based 2 only on a reasonable suspicion that they may be in the country without authorization.
3 Plaintiffs' claims that they were and continue to be subject to an unconstitutional practice or 4 policy by MCSO are typical of class members' claims.

5 Representation is adequate when named plaintiffs will pursue the action vigorously 6 on behalf of the class and when they have no conflicts of interest with other class members.
7 Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1020 (9th Cir. 1998). Defendants claim that 8 Plaintiffs have a conflict of interest because "the named Plaintiffs lack standing; they lack 9 a valid Fourth Amendment claim under the facts presented; and they lack a valid intentional 10 discrimination claim." (Doc. 444 at 13). These substantive arguments are addressed 11 elsewhere in this order, and they lack merit. The failure of the Rodriguezes' underlying 12 Fourth Amendment claim does not create a conflict of interest with putative class members, 13 especially when they, like other named representatives, argue that MCSO does not have 14 authority to stop people to the extent that MCSO asserts. Defendants do not challenge 15 Plaintiffs' contention that they will prosecute the case vigorously and on behalf of the class.
16 Plaintiffs have met the requirements of Rule 23(a).

17 Plaintiffs may seek certification under Rule 23(b)(2) "only when a single injunction 18 or declaratory judgment would provide relief to each member of the class." Wal-Mart, 131
19 S.Ct. at 2557. The rule does not require, as does Rule 23(b)(3), that common issues of law 20 and fact "predominate," but only that class members "complain of a pattern or practice that 21 is generally applicable to the class as a whole." Walters v. Reno, 145 F.3d 1032, 1047 (9th 22 Cir. 1988). Moreover, "[e]ven if some class members have not been injured by the 23 challenged practice, a class may nevertheless be appropriate." Id. Plaintiffs have alleged a 24 prototypical Rule 23(b)(2) suit, one in which a single injunction or declaratory judgment 25 would provide all class members relief from MCSO's allegedly unconstitutional policy. Wal-
26 Mart, 131 S.Ct at 2257. Defendants do not challenge Plaintiffs' argument that class 27 certification is proper under Rule 23(b)(2), but instead claim that Plaintiffs have not met the 28

1 predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3). This rule, however, is not applicable to the 2 nature of the class sought to be certified. Walters, 145 F.3d at 1047 (“Although common 3 issues must predominate for class certification under Rule 23(b)(3), no such requirement 4 exists under 23(b)(2).”). Plaintiffs have demonstrated that their proposed class meets the 5 requirements for certification.

6 Finally, Defendants challenge the class as overbroad. (Doc. 444 at 14–16). The rule 7 that class definitions not be overbroad is “designed to protect absentees.” Amchem Prods., 8 Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 620 (1997). When a class is certified under Rule 23(b)(2), 9 notice need not be given to individual class members, and members do not have the 10 opportunity to “opt-out” of the litigation. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(c)(2). There remains a risk after 11 a Rule 23(b)(2) certification, therefore, that “individuals who may never learn of the 12 pendency of [the] case might encounter difficulty in pursuing meritorious individual 13 litigation in the future, on the basis of lis pendens, res judicata, or collateral estoppel.” Rice
14 v. City of Philadelphia, 66 F.R.D. 17, 21 (E.D. Pa. 1974). Regarding the equitable relief 15 sought by Plaintiffs in Count One and Count Four, such concerns are mitigated and “it is 16 usually unnecessary to define with precision” the members of a 23(b)(2) class. Id. at 19; see 17 also Crawford v. Honig, 37 F.3d 485, 487 n.2 (9th Cir. 1994) (“In a Rule 23(b)(2) class 18 action for equitable relief, the due process rights of absent class members generally are 19 satisfied by adequate representation alone.”).

20 The Fourth Amendment class, however, presents an overbreadth issue that the Equal 21 Protection class does not. In considering the preclusive effect of class actions, “the general 22 rule is that a class action suit seeking only declaratory and injunctive relief does not bar 23 subsequent individual damage claims by class members, even if based on the same events.” 24 Hiser v. Franklin, 94 F.3d 1287, 1291 (9th Cir. 1996). Here, however, Ortega-Melendres was 25 originally seeking damages in addition to injunctive relief, and only dropped his damages 26 claims in the amended complaint. (Doc. 1 at 20; Doc. 26 at 29–30). Since class members may 27 not opt-out of a 23(b)(2) class, individuals who may have legitimate damages claims against 28

1 MCSO for violating the Fourth Amendment could potentially face difficulty pursuing their 2 claims because courts could find that the class members' initial damages claims may be res
3 judicata to their suit. No class member other than Ortega-Melendres ever sought damages
4 in this action. Further, the Ninth Circuit has found that class notice, rather than the original 5 complaint, determines whether class actions certified under Rule 23(b)(2) are res judicata
6 to subsequent damages claims. Frank v. United Airlines, Inc., 216 F.3d 845, 851 (9th Cir.
7 2000) (“[N]otice in [the earlier suit] was not sufficient under Rule 23 to preclude monetary 8 claims in later suits, for the class in [the earlier suit] was certified and given notice as a Rule 9 23(b)(2) ‘injunction’ class action.”). In other circuits, class actions that have been certified 10 under Rule 23(b)(2), even when they contain ancillary damages claims that are ruled on in 11 litigation, have been found not to bar subsequent damages claims by class members who 12 were “not notified that participation in the class action would preclude a subsequent 13 individual damage action.” Wright v. Collins, 766 F.2d 841, 848 (4th Cir. 1985). The class 14 in this case is being certified pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2), and at this point in the litigation no 15 damages claims are being sought. No class is certified as to any damages claim and this 16 litigation does not preclude future damages claims against MCSO or its officers.

17 In a case seeking injunctive relief, “[t]he fact that the class includes future members 18 does not render the class definition so vague as to preclude certification.” Probe v. State
19 Teachers’ Retirement Sys., 780 F.2d 776, 780 (9th Cir. 1986). Moreover, the class definition 20 is not overbroad in a case alleging racial discrimination when the Plaintiffs, as here, “define 21 the class by the activities of defendants.” Int’l. Molders and Allied Workers’ Local Union No.
22 164 v. Nelson, 102 F.R.D. 457, 464 (N.D. Cal 1983).”¹⁴

23
24 ¹⁴ The class certified in International Molders consisted of “all persons of Hispanic 25 or other Latin American ancestry, residing or working within the jurisdiction of the San 26 Francisco District Office of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) 27 and/or the Livermore Border Patrol Sector, who have in the past, are now, or may in the 28 future be subjected to the policies, practices and conduct of INS and/or the Border Patrol during the course of INS area control operations directed at places of employment.” 102

1 The Plaintiffs' proposed class is therefore certified as "All Latino persons who, since 2 January 2007, have been or will be in the future, stopped, detained, questioned or searched
3 by MCSO agents while driving or sitting in a vehicle on a public roadway or parking area 4 in Maricopa County, Arizona." As in all class actions, the Court has the right to tailor or 5 amend the class definitions should future events suggest that it is appropriate to do so. FED.
6 R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(C).

7 D. Motion for Sur-Reply

8 Defendants have filed a motion for leave to file a sur-reply, claiming that Plaintiffs 9 presented new evidence in their reply supporting their partial summary judgment motion.
10 (Doc. 469). Since Plaintiffs' partial summary judgment motion has been denied, Defendants' 11 motion is dismissed as moot.

12 E. Relief

13 Any justification the MCSO had in detaining Ortega-Melendres relied solely on 14 DiPietro's status as a 287(g)-certified officer, a status that no MCSO officer currently has.
15 Regardless of whether federal law pre-empts specific provisions of SB 1070, "states do not 16 have the inherent authority to enforce the civil provisions of federal immigration law." U.S.
17 v. Arizona, 641 F.3d at 362. Even knowledge, let alone reasonable suspicion, that a person 18 is not legally in the country does not provide probable cause that the person has violated 19 federal criminal immigration law or state criminal law. Martinez-Medina, ___ F.3d at ___, 20 2011 WL 855791, at *6; A.R.S. § 13-2319(A).

21 Therefore, for the reasons previously stated, the certified class is presently entitled to 22 partial injunctive relief enjoining Defendants from detaining any person based solely on 23 knowledge, without more, that the person is in the country without lawful authority. To be 24 clear, the Court is not enjoining MCSO from enforcing valid state laws, or detaining 25 individuals when officers have reasonable suspicion that individuals are violating a state

26 _____
27 F.R.D. at 460.

1 criminal law. Instead, it is enjoining MCSO from violating federal rights protected by the 2 United States Constitution in the process of enforcing valid state law based on an incorrect 3 understanding of the law.

4 A policy of detaining people pursuant to laws that MCSO has no authority to enforce, 5 or detaining them without reasonable suspicion that they are violating laws it can enforce 6 constitutes “continuing, present adverse effects” and therefore merits injunctive relief.
7 O’Shea, 414 U.S at 496. MCSO and its officers need not be enjoined from detaining 8 individuals in order to investigate civil violations of federal immigration law, because they 9 concede that they have such authority. MCSO and all of its officers are, however, enjoined 10 from detaining any person based on knowledge, without more, that the person is unlawfully 11 present within the United States. It follows of course that MCSO may not stop any person 12 based on reasonable suspicion or probable cause, without more, that the person is unlawfully 13 present within the United States. Nor may they seek to develop reasonable suspicion that a 14 person is violating state law by detaining them to ask questions in the absence of reasonable 15 suspicion that they are committing a crime.

16 While MCSO officers can, of course, continue to investigate federal and state criminal 17 law, including immigration-related criminal law, to stop people pursuant to such law, officers 18 must have reasonable suspicion that the person is violating that law, or probable cause that 19 the person has violated that law. MCSO does not have reasonable suspicion that a person is 20 violating or conspiring to violate the state human smuggling law or any other state or federal 21 criminal law because it has knowledge, without more, that the person is in the country 22 without legal authorization.

23 CONCLUSION

24 Plaintiffs are granted partial summary judgment on their Fourth Amendment claims 25 to the extent that they claim MCSO’s stated position that it has the authority to detain persons 26 based on reasonable suspicion, without more, that they are not legally present in the country 27 will cause them future harm. Material questions of fact exist as to whether the underlying 28

1 stops of Ortega-Melendres and Nieto and Meraz were justified under the authority MCSO 2 had at the time, so summary judgment on those claims is inappropriate. The stop of the 3 Rodriguezes was objectively supported by probable cause, and was not prolonged even if 4 Deputy Radcliffe requested their social security cards, so partial summary judgment is 5 granted to Defendants on the Rodriguezes' underlying search and seizure claims.

6 Plaintiffs have demonstrated that there is a genuine issue of fact as to whether MCSO 7 engages in a policy or practice of considering race during its operations. They therefore have 8 standing to seek equitable relief for their equal protection claims, which therefore cannot be 9 dismissed at the summary judgment phase. Because the question of whether MCSO engaged 10 in a policy of intentional discrimination requires credibility determinations best suited to a 11 trial, however, Plaintiffs will also not be granted summary judgment on their equal protection 12 claims.

13 Plaintiffs have met their burden for class certification under Rule 23. The litigation 14 is certified as a class action, with the following certified class: "All Latino persons who, 15 since January, 2007, have been or will be in the future, stopped, detained, questioned or 16 searched by MCSO agents while driving or sitting in a vehicle on a public roadway or 17 parking area in Maricopa County, Arizona."

18 Since Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment is denied even considering the record 19 presented, there is no need to consider Defendants' Motion to File a Sur-Reply, which is 20 dismissed as moot.

21 MCSO acknowledges that enforcing immigration law is one of the purposes of the 22 special operations. Local law enforcement agencies, such as the MCSO, may not enforce 23 civil federal immigration law. Defendants are therefore enjoined from detaining individuals 24 in order to investigate civil violations of federal immigration law, including those "regulating 25 authorized entry, length of stay, residence status, and deportation." U.S. v. Arizona, 641 F.3d 26 at 362. They are further enjoined from detaining any person based on actual knowledge, 27 without more, that the person is not a legal resident of the United States.
