INTERESTS OF AMICI CURIAE[1]

This brief is submitted by the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., the Impact Fund, and 30 other non-profit civil rights and legal advocacy organizations.

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. (LDF) is a non-profit legal organization that, for more than seven decades, has fought to achieve racial justice and ensure that America fulfills its promise of equality for all. In this Court and other federal and state courts, LDF has litigated numerous class actions, which are particularly effective in facilitating concerted action to secure systemic change. See, e.g., Lewis v. City of Chicago, 560 U.S. 205 (2010); Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867 (1984); Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747 (1976); Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424 (1971); Newman v. Piggie Park Enters., Inc., 390 U.S. 400 (1968). LDF has also appeared as a party and as an amicus before this Court in several cases involving arbitration issues. See, e.g., AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 563 U.S. 333 (2011); Green Tree Fin. Corp. v. Bazzle, 539 U.S. 444 (2003); Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams, 532 U.S. 105 (2001); *Wright v. Universal Mar. Serv. All parties have consented to the filing of this brief.

The Impact Fund is a non-profit foundation that provides funding, training, and co-counsel to public interest litigators across the country. The Impact Fund has been counsel in numerous civil-rights class actions, including cases challenging employment discrimination, lack of access for persons with disabilities, and violations of fair housing laws.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

American democracy depends upon our unwavering commitment to equal opportunity. Federal labor law honors that commitment by guaranteeing employees the right to challenge workplace discrimination through concerted activity, including picketing, striking, and group adjudication of workplace rights. Yet mandatory pre-dispute arbitration agreements, which have become increasingly prevalent in the American workplace, now commonly prohibit employees from joining together in any combination and in any legal forum to vindicate their right to be free from workplace discrimination, and other core statutory rights.[2] By barring every imaginable form of group legal challenge to an employer's unlawful workplace practices – from simple joinder to consolidation of claims to collective and class actions – these contractual prohibitions pose a substantial threat to Congress' longstanding goal of eradicating discrimination in the American workplace. Specifically, workers will be precluded from using certain core civil rights legal theories that have been crucial for securing equal opportunity in the workplace. For civil rights, the consequences of permitting unrestrained and ubiquitous use of arbitration clauses in individual employment agreements will be profound.

[2] Amici's arguments directly relate to the arbitration provisions at issue in NLRB v. Murphy Oil, No. 16-307 (5th Cir.) and Ernst & Young LLP v. Morris, No. 16-300 (9th Cir.). The arbitration provision in Epic Systems v. Lewis, No. 16-285 (7th Cir.) excludes "claims alleging discrimination, harassment, or retaliation" from its coverage. Epic Systems v. Lewis, Petition at 32a.

"Civil rights and class actions have an historic partnership." Jack Greenberg, Civil Rights Class Actions: Procedural Means of Obtaining Substance, 39 Ariz. L. Rev. 575, 577 (1997). Landmark class actions and other forms of group litigation have long been essential components of our nation's slow but deliberate progress toward a "more perfect Union." This Court's 1954 decision in Brown v. Board of Education is but one example of how concerted action has been the foundation for promoting equal opportunity for all Americans. 347 U.S. 483 (1954). Civil rights concerted actions have been indispensable in reducing discrimination in almost every sphere of American society. When a plaintiff brings a class action under the civil rights laws, "he does so not for himself alone but also as a 'private attorney general,' vindicating a policy that Congress considered the highest priority." See Newman v. Piggie Park Enters., Inc., 390 U.S. 400, 400-02 (1968) (successfully enjoining discrimination against African Americans at a South Carolina restaurant chain).

Concerted actions remain essential to combat persistent discrimination. See Hon. Robert L. Carter, The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as a Vindicator of Civil Rights, 137 U. Pa. L. Rev. 2179, 2184 (1989) (hereinafter "Carter, Federal Rules") (noting the "special dependence" of civil rights litigation on the device of the class action). Since the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, many of the most significant employment discrimination cases have been brought as concerted actions, and – with few exceptions – could not have been brought or would not have achieved successful results as individual actions. Concerted actions can remedy civil rights violations in circumstances where workers are unlikely to proceed alone, for lack of resources or because of well-documented fear of retaliation. In the employment context, concerted legal actions also serve broader public interests by remedying and deterring civil rights violations and dismantling systemic discrimination in the workplace.

Discrimination claims pursued in concert have enabled workers to expose institution-wide discrimination and have resulted in comprehensive remedial orders that brought into legal compliance the employment practices of some of our country's leading corporations, including Abercrombie & Fitch, Coca-Cola, Comcast, Eastman Kodak, FedEx, Morgan Stanley, Novartis, Sodexho Marriott Services, Sprint, Wal-Mart, and Xerox.[3]

Coca-Cola Co.*, 200 F.R.D. 685 (N.D. Ga. 2001) (approving class settlement on behalf of 2,200 current and former African-American employees).

v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., a single employee "was helpless in dealing with an employer . . . he was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and his family; . . . if the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and resist arbitrary and unfair treatment." 301 U.S. 1, 33 (1937). In enacting § 7 of the Nat'l Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., and § 2 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 101 et seq., before that, Congress took direct steps to help equalize the bargaining power of employers and their employees by guaranteeing employees the right to band together in confronting an employer. NLRB v. City Disposal Sys. Inc., 465 U.S. 822, 834 (1984). This statutorily protected right to proceed in concert furthers those same goals by ensuring meaningful access to a neutral dispute resolution process that can provide a complete and effective remedy for unlawful employer conduct directed at similarly situated employees. Employment contracts that prohibit concerted legal actions destroy that equilibrium and hazard America's hard-won progress towards equality.

Forcing workers to proceed alone creates unique dangers for civil rights enforcement. Such restrictions effectively foreclose the use of two crucial methods for proving employment discrimination: disparate impact and pattern-or-practice theories. Restrictions on concerted actions also limit the availability of systemic injunctions, a tool that has been critical to the eradication of discrimination in the workplace. If employers can preclude workers from acting together in every forum, they can – and will – effectively extinguish the civil rights claims of the most vulnerable members of the workforce.

ARGUMENT

I. CONCERTED ACTIONS HAVE HELPED TO ENSURE OUR NATION'S PROGRESS TOWARD EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY.

For decades, as both this Court and Congress have recognized, concerted actions in federal court have spurred progress toward equal opportunity and advanced our federal antidiscrimination laws' broad remedial "purpose[] . . . of eradicating discrimination throughout the economy." Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405, 405-06 (1975). This progress would not have occurred if, instead of banding together to pursue claims in open court, employees were forced into individual, confidential dispute-resolution proceedings.

Concerted actions have been instrumental to the development of employment discrimination jurisprudence. For example, the transformative decision of Griggs v. Duke Power Co. – which established that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 2000(e) et seq., does not tolerate facially-neutral employment practices that operate as discriminatory barriers to employment – was brought as a class action by a group of African-American power plant employees. 401 U.S. 424, 426 (1971). Similarly, this Court's decision in Albemarle Paper – a class case challenging a racially discriminatory seniority system and employment testing – established a presumption that backpay should be awarded in employment discrimination cases; that holding created a powerful economic incentive for employers to comply with Title VII. 422 U.S. at 405. These cases and others would not have been possible if forced arbitration clauses bound the plaintiff employees.

Concerted actions have also diversified the American workplace by successfully challenging a wide range of discriminatory employment rules and practices, many based on outdated stereotypes. Such cases have established that:

- Women cannot be categorically excluded from jobs that may harm their reproductive capacity. Int'l Union, United Auto. v. Johnson Controls, Inc., 499 U.S. 187 (1991).
- Flight engineers cannot be forced to retire at age 60. W. Air Lines v. Criswell, 472 U.S. 400 (1985).
- Men can apply to work as flight attendants. Wilson v. Sw. Airlines Co., 517 F. Supp. 292 (N.D. Tex. 1981).

- Women cannot be excluded from prison guard jobs by arbitrary height and weight requirements. Dothard v. Rawlinson, 433 U.S. 321 (1977).[4]

Other examples of concerted legal action similarly illustrate the power of such cases as a mechanism for ending workplace discrimination. In McClain v. Lufkin Industries, Inc., the Fifth Circuit affirmed the district court's holding that a large Texas manufacturing plant's "practice of delegating subjective decision-making authority to its white managers with respect to . . . promotions resulted in a disparate impact on [a class of over 700] black employees in violation of Title VII." 519 F.3d 264, 272 (5th Cir. 2008). Among the district court's findings was that, because of the company's practices, "white employees ha[d] a significant advantage in gaining the skills and abilities needed to qualify them for promotion . . . [whereas] Black employees [were] more likely to be placed in dead-end positions and left to seek training on their own." McClain v. Lufkin Indus., No. 9:97-cv-63, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42545, at *32-33 (E.D. Tex. Jan. 13, 2005), aff'd in relevant part, 519 F.3d 264 (5th Cir. 2008). Similarly, in Haynes v. Shoney's, Inc., the district court certified a class and ultimately issued a ruling that remedied "an overt policy of blatant racial discrimination and retaliation" at the Shoney's restaurant chain that was "developed and directed" by "top Shoney's management" and "implemented by all-white supervisory and management personnel." No. 3:89-cv-30093, 1992 WL 752127, at *2 (N.D. Fla. June 22, 1992); see also Haynes v. Shoney's, Inc., No. 3:89-cv-30093, 1993 WL 19915, at *6-7 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 25, 1993) (approving consent decree requiring, inter alia, $105 million in relief to class members and significant corporation-wide reforms). As this Court has explained, "suits alleging racial or ethnic discrimination are often by their very nature class suits, involving classwide wrongs." E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 405 (1977).

Consistent with these cases, Congress has recognized that concerted actions are integral to the enforcement of civil rights laws. In 1972, when Title VII was amended by the Equal Employment Opportunity Act, proposals to abolish class actions or to restrict their scope in Title VII cases were rejected. As the Senate Report stated: "The committee agrees with the courts that Title VII actions are by their very nature class complaints, and that any restriction on such actions would greatly undermine the effectiveness of Title VII." S. Rep. No. 92-415, at 27 (1971), reprinted in Subcomm. on Labor of the S. Comm. on Labor and Pub. Welfare, Legislative History of the Equal Opportunity Act of 1972, at 436 (1972). Both the Equal Pay Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 206(d), and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 621 et seq., incorporate the enforcement provisions of 29 U.S.C.A. § 216(b), which expressly authorize "[a]n action to . . . be maintained . . . by any one or more employees for and in behalf of himself or themselves and other employees similarly situated." This Court has recognized that in "[t]he ADEA, through incorporation of § 216(b) [of the FLSA] . . . Congress has stated its policy that . . . plaintiffs should have the opportunity to proceed collectively." Hoffman-La Roche, Inc. v. Sperling, 493 U.S. 165, 170 (1989).

II. CONCERTED ACTIONS ARE UNIQUELY EFFECTIVE IN REMEDYING AND DETERRING SYSTEMIC EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION.

A. Concerted Actions Promote Employee Collaboration.

For individuals who have experienced discrimination and other civil rights violations, "association for litigation may be the most effective form of political association." NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 431 (1963); accord In re Primus, 436 U.S. 412, 423-26 (1978). For example, a sense of shared commitment among African-American workers at Duke Power in North Carolina helped to catalyze the class action that led to this Court's landmark decision in Griggs. 401 U.S. at 431; see also Robert Samuel Smith, Race, Labor & Civil Rights: Griggs versus Duke Power and the Struggle for Equal Employment Opportunity 84-90, 113, 177-81 (David Goldfield ed., La. State Univ. Press 2008).

The ability of workers to share their experiences with one another and take concerted legal action has also helped to facilitate the eradication of hostile and unlawful harassment in some workplaces. As this Court has observed, "whether an environment is 'hostile' or 'abusive' can be determined only by looking at all [of] the circumstances." Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 23 (1993) (emphasis added). This inquiry may be both complex and subtle because "[t]he real social impact of workplace behavior often depends on a constellation of surrounding circumstances, expectations, and relationships which are not fully captured by a simple recitation of the words used or the physical acts performed." Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Servs., Inc., 523 U.S. 75, 81-82 (1998).

As such, victims of harassment frequently join with their co-workers to challenge abusive environments in multi-plaintiff, collective, or class actions.[5]

[5] See, e.g., Ellis v. Houston, 742 F.3d 307 (8th Cir. 2014) (five African-American correctional officers challenged pattern of racial harassment by supervisor in Nebraska penitentiary); Bennett v. Nucor Corp., 656 F.3d 802 (8th Cir. 2011) (six African-American steel production plant workers unlawfully subjected to racially hostile work environment); Hall v. Gus Constr. Co., 842 F.2d 1010, 1013-15 (8th Cir. 1988) (three female "flag persons" proved sexually hostile environment perpetrated by male road construction crew); Brand v. Comcast Corp., 302 F.R.D. 201, 207 (N.D. Ill. 2014) (challenge to racially hostile environment in telecommunications facility); Velez v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., 244 F.R.D. 243 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (female sales employees alleged hostile work environment and other gender based claims against national pharmaceutical company); Smith v. Nike Retail Servs., 234 F.R.D. 648 (N.D. Ill. 2006) (18 African-American retail workers alleged racially hostile work environment on behalf of class employed in Chicago area stores); Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 824 F. Supp. 847, 879-87 (D. Minn. 1993) (class of female workers in taconite mining facility established that "sexualized" work environment was objectively hostile); Sellars v. CRST Expedited, Inc., No. C15-117, 2017

The mutually corroborating testimony of co-workers can be critical to plaintiffs' ability to meet their burden of proving that the alleged harassing conduct was not isolated or sporadic,[6] can illuminate the context of such behavior,[7] and can establish why the conduct should be deemed objectively harassing to a reasonable person.[8] For example, if a manager regularly propositions female subordinates behind closed doors, joint legal action can empower victims to bring the harassing conduct to light and overcome a "he said/she said" defense that is often fatal in individual actions.

When workers act together to expose and prove discrimination or harassment, their joint efforts create economies of scale. This Court has repeatedly recognized the importance of concerted actions in providing legal redress for inequities that may be too time- and resource-intensive to realistically challenge through isolated individual claims. See, e.g., Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 617 (1997); Hoffman-La Roche, 493 U.S. at 170; Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 339 (1980). Without the right to challenge discrimination through concerted legal action, many meritorious civil rights claims will never be pursued at all, for reasons unrelated to their merits. Especially for low-wage workers, the amount of potential recovery in an employment case is often so small, and the costs of litigation so high, that pursuing an individual claim would be economically irrational. See Jarvaise v. Rand Corp., 212 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 2002) (noting in suit alleging sex discrimination in pay, "[w]ithout class certification, there could be . . . a significant number of individuals deprived of their day in court because they are otherwise unable to afford independent representation."). Many workers also lack knowledge about the full range of protections afforded by anti-discrimination laws or which particular employer practices or policies run afoul of those laws, and cannot even begin to address any violation of those rights absent notice from co-workers or a court that a group legal challenge has been initiated. See Hoffmann-La Roche Inc., 493 U.S. at 170 ("These benefits . . . depend on employees receiving accurate and timely notice concerning the pendency of the collective action, so that they can make informed decisions about whether to participate").

Concerted actions, by contrast, allow multiple plaintiffs to share the costs and burdens of litigation, which is often key to obtaining redress. See, e.g., Duke v. Univ. of Tex. at El Paso, 729 F.2d 994, 997 (5th Cir. 1984) (reversing judgment against a discrimination plaintiff to permit broad discovery in support of a class certification motion). Such actions can also trigger a broader inquiry into discrimination, yielding company-wide evidence that an individual plaintiff is less likely to uncover. See Suzette M. Malveaux, Clearing Civil Procedural Hurdles in the Quest for Justice, 37 Ohio N.U. L. Rev. 621, 631 (2011).

B. Concerted Actions Allay Fears and Reduce the Risks of Retaliation.

Concerted actions also help to ameliorate legitimate fears of retaliation, which would otherwise discourage individuals from proceeding alone. Reflecting on his experience as a civil rights litigator, Judge Robert Carter observed that in cases "seeking to vindicate novel rights in the face of majoritarian hostility, the very ability to proceed required the institution of a class action" because a "lone plaintiff" may be "extremely vulnerable to the pressure of intimidation." Carter, Federal Rules, at 2186; see also Mullen v. Treasure Chest Casino, LLC, 186 F.3d 620, 624 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding class certification requirements satisfied where "class members still employed by the [defendant] might be reluctant to file individually for fear of workplace retaliation").

Unlike plaintiffs in most consumer or securities cases, workers who press claims for employment discrimination are uniquely vulnerable to retaliation. Consequently, many victims of employment discrimination are deterred from vindicating their rights, for fear of losing the weekly paycheck by which they provide for their families. "A reasonable employee facing the choice between retaining her job (and paycheck) and filing a discrimination complaint might well choose the former." Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. v. White, 548 U.S. 53, 73 (2006). While the law provides a potential remedy for those who can ultimately prove retaliation, the prospect of compensation sometime in the future is cold comfort when an employee is suspended or fired for asserting his or her rights. See id. ("[A]n indefinite suspension without pay could well act as a deterrent, even if the suspended employee eventually received backpay."). Moreover, retaliation in the workplace can be subtle, indirect, and difficult if not impossible to prove, making the threat of adverse consequences all the more chilling. Because of their economic vulnerability, low-wage workers face significant obstacles when they seek to vindicate their rights, including particularly pernicious forms of retaliation.

Concerted legal action permits workers to overcome these fears and stand together to assert their rights. "Employment discrimination suits seeking injunctive relief are frequently managed as class actions due to distinctive difficulties with joinder. Prospective plaintiffs may refuse to identify themselves for fear of harassment or retaliation by the employer." McClain v.

Lufkin Indus., Inc., 187 F.R.D. 267, 278 (E.D. Tex. 1999). A worker who must stand alone to confront her employer and challenge a violation of her civil rights will be far less likely to do so if she must bear that risk alone. See, e.g., Mullen, 186 F.3d at 625 (Casino workers "might be unwilling to sue individually or join a suit for fear of retaliation at their jobs.").

C. Concerted Actions Ensure Corporate Transparency and Promote Accountability.

Employers are less likely to be held accountable for discrimination when challenged on an individual basis, especially when strict confidentiality provisions are in place, as they are in many employment arbitration agreements. See Malveaux, supra, at 631. The resulting harms to victimized employees and to the congressional purposes and policies underlying federal workplace protections are enormous. Individual employees are often unaware when their rights are violated, either because their employer has successfully concealed the discrimination or because it occurs in patterns that are not recognizable to individual employees. For example, discrimination that results in pay disparities is often difficult to detect because pay decisions are made confidentially and many employers discourage or outright prohibit employees from discussing salary. See U.S. Dep't of Labor, Women's Bureau, Fact Sheet, Pay Secrecy, 1 (Aug. 2014), https://www.dol.gov/wb/media/pay_secrecy.pdf ("In 2010, nearly half of all workers nationally reported that they were either contractually forbidden or strongly discouraged from discussing their pay with their colleagues."). Confidential arbitration decisions also cannot provide guidance to law-abiding employers who want to comply with civil rights laws in their personnel decisions. See AAA Employment Arbitration Rules and Mediation Procedures, Rule 23 (2009) ("The arbitrator shall maintain the confidentiality of the arbitration and shall have the authority to make appropriate rulings to safeguard that confidentiality, unless the parties agree otherwise or the law provides to the contrary.").[9]

The exposure that accompanies concerted legal action also helps to deter future wrongdoing by signaling to the market that employment discrimination is harmful economically and reputationally to the corporate brand. A federal district court recognized these benefits when it approved an "imaginative" nationwide class settlement to resolve allegations that Texaco pervasively discriminated against African-American

[9] In Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp., 500 U.S. 20, 31-32 (1991), a case brought by older workers under the ADEA, the Court considered whether arbitration would lead to "a stifling of the development of the law" under circumstances far different from those here. There, the rules at issue allowed for collective proceedings and required all arbitration awards to be in writing and made public, with a summary of the award and issues in controversy. Id. But in the consolidated cases here, one of the three arbitration clauses requires that arbitration proceedings, "including any award made, shall be confidential[.]" Ernst & Young LLP v. Morris, No. 16-300, JA 46. The other two invoke the American Arbitration Association's rules, for employment arbitration, quoted above, which mandate confidentiality. NLRB v. Murphy Oil, No. 16-307, JA at 8, Epic Systems Corp. v. Lewis, No. 16-285, Petition at 33a.

employees and concealed evidence pertinent to the litigation. Roberts v. Texaco, Inc., 979 F. Supp. 185, 189-93, 198 (S.D.N.Y. 1997). The court noted that the case "captured national attention" and "may well have important ameliorative impact not only at Texaco but in the corporate context as a whole." Id. at 189, 197-98.

III. MOST WORKERS CANNOT USE KEY CIVIL RIGHTS LEGAL THEORIES OR OBTAIN BROAD INJUNCTIVE RELIEF IN THEIR INDIVIDUAL ACTIONS.

Concerted actions are essential to remedying employment discrimination, and much important civil rights jurisprudence has developed in the context of this group paradigm. Individualized actions, by contrast, are poorly equipped to address pervasive and entrenched discrimination. They preclude workers from using three major tools for identifying and remedying workplace discrimination.

A. Disparate Impact Theory

Disparate impact theory – a cornerstone of equal employment jurisprudence for more than four decades – targets facially neutral workplace practices that disproportionately burden members of a protected group without legal justification. In addition to Title VII, employment discrimination claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act, Raytheon Co. v. Hernandez, 540 U.S. 44 (2003), and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Smith v. City of Jackson, 544 U.S. 228 (2005), may also use disparate impact analysis.

Disparate impact cases have played a powerful role in making employment opportunities available to members of groups unjustifiably excluded by archaic employment rules, tests unrelated to job performance, and subjective criteria used by public and private employers.[10] The disparate impact theory of discrimination continues to be of vital importance today.[11]

[10] See, e.g., Dothard, 433 U.S. at 331-32 (striking down Alabama's height and weight requirements for correctional counselors that disproportionately excluded women and were not job-related); Albemarle Paper Co., 422 U.S. at 405 (successful challenge to job seniority rules and employment tests that locked African-American workers into lower paying positions in paper mill); Rowe v. GM Corp., 457 F.2d 348 (5th Cir. 1972) (court enjoined subjective transfer/promotion system at auto assembly plant which resulted in disparate impact on African-American employees).

[11] See, e.g., Ernst v. City of Chicago, 837 F.3d 788, 805 (7th Cir. 2016) (female applicants for paramedic positions proved that physical abilities test had a disparate impact that was not job related); Scott v. Family Dollar Stores, Inc., 733 F.3d 105, 117 (4th Cir. 2013) (female store managers may properly challenge subjective compensation policy under disparate impact theory); Houser v. Pritzker, 28 F. Supp. 3d 222 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (challenge by Black and Latino applicants to use of arrest records as screening device for temporary U.S. census positions); McReynolds v. Merrill Lynch, 672 F.3d 482, 491 (7th Cir. 2012) (disparate impact challenge to account distribution and teaming policies that adversely affected African-American brokers); United States v. City of New York, 637

Disparate impact claims are "typically" brought as class actions, 1 Lindemann, Grossman & Weirich, Employment Discrimination Law 3-3 (5th ed. 2012) (hereinafter "Lindemann, Empl. Discrim. Law"), or by groups of workers, see, e.g., Chin v. Port Auth. of N.Y. & N.J., 685 F.3d 135 (2d Cir. 2012); Maldonado v. City of Altus, 433 F.3d 1294, 1303-07 (10th Cir. 2006). Disparate impact claims for a single individual are very rare, and are rarely successful.[12] As the Tenth Circuit long ago observed, "discriminatory impact cannot be established where you have just one isolated decision." Coe v. Yellow Freight Sys., 646 F.2d 444, 451 (10th Cir. 1981).

F. Supp. 2d 77, 131-32 (E.D.N.Y. 2009) (invalidating fire department's written examinations that had an unjustified disparate impact on African-American and Latino applicants).

[12] See, e.g., Cosgrove v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 9 F.3d 1033, 1041 (2d Cir. 1993) (female plaintiff's comparison using seven male employees insufficient to meet statistical burden to establish disparate impact); Young v. Covington & Burling LLP, 846 F. Supp. 2d 141, 160-61 (D.D.C. 2012) (plaintiff's statistical evidence failed to demonstrate that law firm promotion policy had a disparate impact on African Americans); Hankins v. Best Buy Co., No. 10-cv-4508, 2011 WL 6016233, at *8 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 2, 2011) (individual disparate impact claim dismissed because the "complaint must also allege that individuals other than the plaintiff were affected by the facially neutral policy"); Coopersmith v. Roudebush, 517 F.2d 818, 820-21 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (single plaintiff failed to demonstrate that legal experience requirement had disparate impact). But see Gonzales v. City of New Braunfels, 176 F.3d 834, 839 n.26 (5th Cir. 1999) ("In the ADA context, a plaintiff may satisfy the second prong of his prima facie case by demonstrating an adverse impact on himself rather than on an entire group.").

The evidence in disparate impact cases "usually focuses on statistical disparities, rather than specific incidents, and on competing explanations for those disparities." Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 987 (1988). This Court has underscored the demanding nature of the necessary statistical proof, as well as the need to establish a causal link between the disparity and the challenged employment practice. See Wards Cove Packing Co. v. Atonio, 490 U.S. 642, 650-59 (1989); Watson, 487 U.S. at 993-99; see also Meacham v. Knolls Atomic Power Lab., 554 U.S. 84, 101-02 (2008).

For this reason, broad discovery of workforce data is essential for plaintiffs to meet their burden in a disparate impact case, particularly since pertinent information is generally within the exclusive control of the defendant. This Court has recognized this need, and has underscored that "liberal civil discovery rules give plaintiffs broad access to employers' records in an effort to document their claims." Wards Cove, 490 U.S. at 657 (addressing the suggestion that the Title VII disparate impact causation requirement was "unduly burdensome"). The scope of discovery necessary to generate these statistical analyses is generally not available in individual actions. See, e.g., Woodward v. Emulex Corp., 714 F.3d 632, 636 (1st Cir. 2013) (in individual age discrimination action, no abuse of discretion when discovery limited to 21 sales workers); see generally 2 Lindemann, Empl. Discrim. Law at 24-25 ("Different discovery rules may apply in class actions, as a class suit by definition involves persons and circumstances beyond the particular named plaintiff.").

Even where discovery is available in an individual proceeding, when analyzing a single employment decision there is a significant risk that the "relevant data base [may be] too small to permit any meaningful statistical analysis." Watson, 487 U.S. at 1000; see, e.g., Tyler v. Univ. of Ark. Bd. of Trs., 628 F.3d 980, 990 (8th Cir. 2011) (sample of six job applicants too small for meaningful statistical analysis); 2 Lindemann, supra, at 35-75 ("Courts have recognized that statistical evidence often is unreliable when the sample size is small."). Put simply, individuals who are forced to proceed alone will have a hard time making out a disparate impact claim. See Elizabeth Tippett, Robbing a Barren Vault: The Implications of Dukes v. Wal-Mart for Cases Challenging Subjective Employment Practices, 29 Hofstra Lab. & Emp. L.J. 433, 443-44 (2012) ("Although disparate impact claims are available to individual plaintiffs, such claims are rarely successful. This is largely a function of the evidentiary rigors of a disparate impact claim, consisting of aggregate statistics showing that an employer's facially neutral practices had a disproportionately adverse impact on a protected group.").

B. Pattern or Practice Theory

Individualized adjudication is similarly not compatible with the pattern-or-practice method of proof. A distinctive feature of employment discrimination jurisprudence, pattern-or-practice claims have been recognized as an essential tool in combating pervasive workplace discrimination and providing "make whole relief" to victims. See Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 336 n.16 (1977) (observing the necessity of pattern-or-practice litigation to address discrimination that is "repeated, routine or of a generalized nature"); see also EEOC v. Shell Oil Co., 466 U.S. 54, 69 (1984) (noting that the pattern-or-practice model is "essential if the purposes of Title VII [are] to be achieved"). This Court reaffirmed the availability of the Teamsters pattern-or-practice method of proof in class action cases in Walmart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 352 n.7 (2011).

Pattern-or-practice claims are grounded in this Court's recognition that "[i]n many cases the only available avenue of proof is the use of racial statistics to uncover clandestine and covert discrimination by the employer or union involved." Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 339-40 n.20 (quoting United States v. Ironworkers Local 86, 443 F.2d 544, 551 (9th Cir. 1971)). But numerous circuits have held that the pattern-or-practice method of proof is not available in individual or multi-plaintiff cases. See, e.g., Chin, 685 F.3d 135; Davis v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 516 F.3d 955, 967-69 (11th Cir. 2008); Bacon v. Honda of Am. Mfg., 370 F.3d 565 (6th Cir. 2004); Lowery v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 158 F.3d 742, 761 (4th Cir. 1998), vacated on other grounds, 527 U.S. 1031 (1999).

The pattern-or-practice framework not only allows, but requires, courts to step back and assess the universe of an employer's actions as a whole. Only through this broader lens can widespread discrimination be uncovered and evaluated. In individual adjudication, however, workers are less able to avail themselves of this tool.

C. Systemic Injunctive Relief

Systemic injunctive relief – another critical tool for dismantling discriminatory conditions – is also ordinarily unavailable in individual cases. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 provides the vehicle for a generally applicable and efficient class-wide remedy, resulting in cessation of the discriminatory practice and, where appropriate, additional equitable remedies for class members. However, absent class certification, courts often refrain from granting relief that extends beyond the harms suffered by the individual plaintiffs.

This Court has held that "the scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established." Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702 (1979); see also Sharpe v. Cureton, 319 F.3d 259, 273 (6th Cir. 2003) ("While district courts are not categorically prohibited from granting injunctive relief benefitting an entire class in an individual suit, such broad relief is rarely justified."); Hernandez v. Reno, 91 F.3d 776, 781 (5th Cir. 1996) (injunction can apply only to the named plaintiff until class is certified); Marshall v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 554 F.2d 730, 733 (5th Cir. 1977) (in ADEA case for individual termination, "nationwide or companywide injunction is appropriate only when the facts indicate a company policy or practice in violation of the statute").

In Lowery v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., a unanimous jury found that Circuit City had engaged in a pattern or practice of racial discrimination, and the district court ordered broad injunctive relief, including the creation of new procedures to ensure nondiscriminatory promotion. 158 F.3d at 761. However, on appeal, the Fourth Circuit held that because the district court had declined to certify a class, the plaintiffs could not use evidence of systematic discrimination under the Teamsters framework to prove instances of individual discrimination. Id. (citing Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 324). Accordingly, the court granted relief to one of the named plaintiffs, but vacated all other equitable relief, including an injunction requiring the employer to promote employees "without regard to their race." Lowery, 158 F.3d at 766-67. The lack of class certification forced the court to disregard a finding of pervasive discrimination, thwarting the plaintiffs' effort to fully vindicate the purposes of Title VII. Id. at 766.

Concerted actions in federal courts have established key legal precedents essential to our nation's progress toward equal opportunity. These precedents give full meaning to our antidiscrimination statutes and provide clarity for employers who want to comply with the law. As this Court has recognized, the legislative purposes that animate our civil rights statutes require "the principled application of standards consistent with those purposes," Albemarle, 422 U.S. at 417, and "[i]mportant national goals would be frustrated by a regime of discretion that 'produce[d] different results for breaches of duty in situations that cannot be differentiated in policy,'" id. (quoting Moragne v. States Marine Lines, 398 U.S. 375, 405 (1970)). Allowing mandatory individual arbitration to displace the federally-guaranteed right to concerted legal action would create just such a regime. It would also deprive most employees of the kind of evidence that is necessary to challenge widespread, institutional discrimination and would make it difficult or impossible to secure broad-based injunctive relief. Under such a piecemeal regime, workers would be far less effective in removing arbitrary and invidious discrimination from the workplace.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the NLRB's and employees' positions should be accepted and the rulings of the Seventh and Ninth Circuits should be affirmed, while the Fifth Circuit's ruling should be reversed.

LIST OF ADDITIONAL AMICI

AARP is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization dedicated to fulfilling the needs and representing the interests of people age fifty and older. AARP fights to protect the financial security, health, and well-being of older persons. AARP's charitable affiliate, AARP Foundation, creates and advances effective solutions that help low-income individuals age fifty and older secure the essentials. AARP and AARP Foundation combat age and disability-based employment discrimination against older workers, including through participation as amici curiae in state and federal courts. See e.g., Tyson Foods, Inc. v Bouaphakeo, 136 S. Ct. 1036 (2016); Meacham v. Knolls Atomic Power Lab., 554 U.S. 84 (2008); Spector v. Norwegian Cruise Line Ltd., 545 U.S. 119 (2005); Smith v. City of Jackson, 544 U.S. 228 (2005).

The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) is a nationwide, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization with over 1.6 million members dedicated to the principles of liberty and equality embodied in the Constitution and this nation's civil rights laws. Since its founding in 1920, the American Civil Liberties Union has appeared in numerous cases before this Court, both as counsel representing parties and as amicus curiae. The ACLU and its state affiliates advance the cause of civil liberties and civil rights through advocacy and litigation, including class action litigation, lawsuits on behalf of multiple plaintiffs, and other collective legal actions. The ACLU has served and is currently serving as counsel in numerous class action lawsuits that have been critical to obtaining redress for constitutional violations and ensuring that federal and state laws and government policies comport with the Constitution.

Asian Americans Advancing Justice – Asian Law Caucus (ALC) was founded in 1972 with a mission to promote, advance, and represent the legal and civil rights of Asian and Pacific Islanders, with a particular focus on low-income members of those communities. ALC is part of a national affiliation of Asian American civil rights groups, with offices in Los Angeles, Chicago, Washington DC, and Atlanta. ALC's advocacy includes legal counseling, direct services, and class-action litigation for low-wage immigrant workers facing a wide range of workplace issues, including race and national origin discrimination, retaliation, and wage and hour problems. ALC also regularly provides representation for workers organizing collectively to change and improve their workplace conditions.

Asian Americans Advancing Justice – Los Angeles (Advancing Justice-LA) is the nation's largest legal and civil rights organization for Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders (NHPI). Advancing Justice-LA serves more than 15,000 individuals every year, including Asian Americans and NHPIs who lack effective access to the courts. Through direct services, impact litigation, policy advocacy and capacity building, Advancing Justice-LA focuses on vulnerable members of Asian American and NHPI communities, while also building a strong voice for civil rights and social justice. Advancing Justice-LA has a long history of working to ensure that members of our communities have effective access to courts. We have represented vulnerable members of our communities in federal courts on a broad range of issues, including language rights and language access, workers' rights, consumer protection, education rights, housing rights, voting rights, health care, and public benefits, among others.

The California Women's Law Center (CWLC) is a statewide, nonprofit law and policy center dedicated to advancing the civil rights of women and girls. CWLC works to ensure, through systemic change, that life opportunities for women and girls are free from unjust social, economic, and political constraints. CWLC acknowledges the importance of class action litigation to effecting widespread change, and has acted as counsel in a number of civil rights class actions, including cases challenging unfair educational opportunities for female students at K-12 schools under Title IX.

The Center for Reproductive Rights is a global advocacy organization that uses the law to advance reproductive freedom, an essential predicate of gender equality and full participation in social and economic life. In the United States, the Center's work focuses on protecting and expanding the constitutional, statutory, and human rights that guarantee reproductive autonomy, which includes the right to make decisions about family life free from discrimination in the workplace or elsewhere. Since its founding in 1992, the Center has been actively involved in nearly all major litigation in the U.S. concerning reproductive rights, in both state and federal courts. As a rights-based organization, the Center has a vital interest in ensuring that individuals and groups endeavoring to exercise their rights have robust tools to achieve redress in the courts, including the ability to seek class and systemic relief.

Since 1969, Centro Legal de la Raza (Centro Legal) has provided legal aid services to low-income, predominantly Spanish-speaking residents of the San Francisco Bay Area. Centro Legal assists several thousand clients annually, including numerous class actions on behalf of immigrant and other low-income workers. Centro Legal therefore has a significant interest in protecting concerted activity by workers to address workplace violations.

The Civil Rights Education and Enforcement Center (CREEC) is a national nonprofit membership organization whose mission is to defend human and civil rights secured by law, including laws prohibiting discrimination in employment. CREEC's efforts to defend human and civil rights extend to all walks of life, and CREEC and its members have an interest in ensuring that our nation's civil rights laws can be vigorously and effectively enforced through individual and collective action.

Disability Rights Advocates (DRA) is a nonprofit public interest legal center that specializes in high impact civil rights litigation and other advocacy on behalf of persons with disabilities throughout the United States. With offices in Berkeley, California and

New York, New York, DRA works to end discrimination in areas such as access to public accommodations, public services, employment, transportation, education, technology and housing. In Bates v. UPS, DRA represented a nationwide class of UPS employees and applicants with hearing loss who had been categorically excluded from certain positions as a result of the company's use of the Department of Transportation hearing standard as a threshold qualification for driving vehicles weighing 10,000 pounds or less. DRA co-founder Laurence W. Paradis successfully argued the case on appeal to the Ninth Circuit.

The Disability Rights Education & Defense Fund (DREDF) is a national nonprofit law and policy organization dedicated to protecting and advancing the civil rights of people with disabilities. Based in Berkeley, California, DREDF has remained board- and staff-led by people with disabilities since its founding in 1979. DREDF pursues its mission through education, advocacy and law reform efforts, and is nationally recognized for its expertise in the interpretation of federal disability civil rights laws. As part of its mission, DREDF works to ensure that people with disabilities have the legal protections, including effective legal remedies, necessary to vindicate their right to be free from discrimination. The ADA and other disability civil rights laws build on and explicitly incorporate the expansive remedies of other statutory nondiscrimination protections. DREDF and the disability community it represents thus have an interest in the issues presented by this case.

The Equal Justice Society (EJS) is transforming the nation's consciousness on race through law, social science, and the arts. A national legal organization focused on restoring constitutional safeguards against discrimination, EJS's goal is to help achieve a society where race is no longer a barrier to opportunity. Specifically, EJS is working to fully restore the constitutional protections of the Fourteenth Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause, which guarantees all citizens receive equal treatment under the law. We use a three-pronged approach to accomplish these goals, combining legal advocacy, outreach and coalition building, and education through effective messaging and communication strategies. Our legal strategy aims to broaden conceptions of present-day discrimination to include unconscious and structural bias by using cognitive science, structural analysis, and real-life experience.

Founded in 1974, Equal Rights Advocates (ERA) is a national non-profit legal organization dedicated to protecting and expanding economic and educational access and opportunities for women and girls. ERA has litigated class action and other high-impact cases related gender discrimination and civil rights, including Geduldig v. Aiello, 417 U.S. 484 (1974) and Richmond Unified School District v. Berg, 434 U.S. 158 (1977). ERA has appeared as amicus curiae in numerous Supreme Court cases involving the interpretation of anti-discrimination laws, including Meritor Savings Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57 (1986); Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., 510 U.S. 17 (1993); Burlington

Industries v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742 (1998); and Burlington Northern and Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. White, 126 S.Ct. 2405 (2006). Over the course of its forty-year history, ERA has frequently advocated on behalf of women working in male-dominated industries who have suffered egregious discrimination through both facially discriminatory and facially neutral policies and practices. ERA has a strong interest in ensuring that women retain the ability to fairly combat discrimination in the workplace.

Human Rights Campaign (HRC), the largest national lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender political organization, envisions an America where lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people are ensured of their basic equal rights, and can be open, honest and safe at home, at work and in the community.

Justice in Aging's principal mission is to protect the rights of low-income older adults. Through advocacy, litigation, and the education and counseling of legal aid attorneys and other local advocates, we seek to ensure the health and economic security of older adults with limited income and resources. Since 1972, the Justice in Aging (formerly the National Senior Citizens Law Center) has worked to promote the independence and well-being of low-income elderly and persons with disabilities, especially women, people of color, and other disadvantaged minorities. We work tirelessly to preserve and strengthen Medicaid, Medicare, Social Security and SSI, benefits programs that allow low-income older adults to live with dignity and independence. In addition, we seek to ensure their access to the courts and to keep the courts open for justice.

Formed in 1973, Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. is the nation's oldest and largest nonprofit legal organization committed to achieving full recognition of the civil rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender ("LGBT") people and everyone living with HIV through impact litigation, education, and public policy work. Lambda Legal has served as counsel of record or amicus curiae in some of the most important cases regarding the rights of LGBT people and people living with HIV. See, e.g., Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015); United States v. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. 2675 (2013); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003); Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624 (1998); Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620 (1996). Of particular relevance here, for many years, Lambda Legal has been actively litigating the issue of Title VII's application to claims of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity. See, e.g., Hively v. Ivy Tech Cmty. Coll., 853 F.3d 339 (7th Cir. 2017) (en banc); Evans v. Georgia Regl. Hosp., 850 F.3d 1248 (11th Cir. 2017); Glenn v. Brumby, 663 F.3d 1312 (11th Cir. 2011). Based on this experience, Lambda Legal has a strong interest in defending litigants' access to Article III courts, an essential venue for adjudicating unsettled questions regarding the application of federal civil rights laws, particularly for people of color, the financially insecure, and other socially and economically marginalized groups.

LatinoJustice PRLDEF is a national not for profit civil rights legal defense fund that engages in litigation, advocacy, and education to defend the constitutional rights and the equal protection of all Latinos under the law. Since being founded in 1972 as the Puerto Rican Legal Defense & Education Fund, we have championed an equitable society through advancing Latinx civil engagement, cultivating new Latinx community leaders, and engaging in and supporting law reform impact litigation efforts across the country that champion civil rights and equality in the areas of criminal justice, education, employment, immigrants' rights, language rights, redistricting and voting rights.

The Law Foundation of Silicon Valley is a nonprofit agency in San José, California, that provides free legal services to Santa Clara County residents in need in the areas of safe and affordable housing, stable homes for abused and neglected children, and addressing a number of other issues including discrimination, domestic violence, disability rights, and human trafficking. The mission of the Law Foundation is to advance the rights of under-represented individuals and families in our diverse community through legal services, strategic advocacy, and educational outreach. The Law Foundation has litigated numerous civil rights class action cases to advance the cause of justice for our clients. See, e.g., Lewis et al. v. Silvertree Mohave Homeowners' Ass'n et al., No. C 16-03581 WHA (N.D.

Cal. filed Jun. 24, 2016); Huynh et al. v. Harasz et al., 14-CV-02367-LHK (N.D. Cal. filed May 22, 2014); Hopkins et al. v. Flores et al., No. 1-05-CV-035647 (S.C.C. Super. Ct. filed Feb. 15, 2005); Rodriguez, et al. v. Santa Clara Cnty. Dep't of Social Serv., No. C-97-20934 JW (N.D. Cal. filed Oct. 27, 1997); and Lopez, et al. v. Washington Mutual Bank, FA, 302 F.3d 900 (9th Cir. 2002).

The Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law (Lawyers' Committee) is a tax-exempt, nonprofit civil rights organization that was founded in 1963 by the leaders of the American bar, at the request of President John F. Kennedy, in order to mobilize the private bar in vindicating the civil rights of African Americans and other racial and ethnic minorities. The Lawyers' Committee is dedicated, among other goals, to eradicating all forms of workplace discrimination affecting racial and ethnic minorities and other disadvantaged populations. Since the 1960s, the Lawyers' Committee has relied on class and concerted actions under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and other federal and state statutes as essential tools for combating unlawful discrimination in the workplace. The Lawyers' Committee has been involved in cases before the United States Supreme Court involving the interplay of arbitration clauses and the exercise of rights guaranteed by civil rights laws prohibiting employment discrimination, including serving as amicus curiae in AT&T Mobility v. Concepcion, 563 U.S. 333 (2011); Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. Animalfeeds International, 559 U.S. 662 (2010); and Circuit City Stores v. Adams, 532 U.S. 105 (2001).

The Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights (The Leadership Conference) is a diverse coalition of more than 200 national organizations charged with promoting and protecting the civil and human rights of all persons in the United States. It is the nation's largest and most diverse civil and human rights coalition. For more than half a century, The Leadership Conference, based in Washington, D.C., has led the fight for civil and human rights by advocating for federal legislation and policy, securing passage of every major civil rights statute since the Civil Rights Act of 1957. The Leadership Conference works to build an America that is inclusive and as good as its ideals. Towards that end, we have participated as an amicus party in cases of public importance that will affect the civil and human rights of many individuals, and, in particular, the interests of constituencies in The Leadership Conference coalition.

Legal Aid at Work (LAAW), formerly the Legal Aid Society – Employment Law Center, represents low-wage workers facing a range of workplace issues, including unpaid wages, denials of family and medical leave and accommodation, wrongful termination, harassment, retaliation, and discrimination on the basis of race, national origin, immigration status, language, gender, sexual orientation, or disability. LAAW's clients – women, people of color, persons with disabilities, immigrants, and others in low-paying jobs – suffer discrimination, wage and hour violations, unlawful termination, harassment, threats to health and safety, and other illegal on-the-job practices. LAAW litigates law reform and collective and class actions to change policies and practices that hinder access to equal employment opportunities. LAAW has litigated a number of cases under Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the Americans with Disabilities Act, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as well as the Fair Labor Standards Act, among others. Some of LAAW's recent cases include: Arias v. Raimondo, 860 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 2017); Guerrero v. California Department of Corrections, 119 F. Supp. 3d 1065 (N.D. Cal. 2015); Ollier v. Sweetwater Union High School District, 768 F.3d 843 (9th Cir. 2014); and Willits v. City of Los Angeles, 925 F. Supp. 2d 1089 (C.D. Cal. 2013).

Founded in 1968, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund (MALDEF) is the leading national civil rights organization representing the 55 million Latinos living in the United States through litigation, advocacy, and educational outreach. MALDEF's mission is to foster sound public policies, laws, and programs to safeguard the civil rights of Latinos living in the United States and to empower the Latino community to participate fully in our society. MALDEF has litigated many cases under state and federal law to ensure equal treatment of Latinos, including many class actions in the areas of education, employment, immigrant rights, and voting rights.

Since 1973, the National LGBTQ Task Force has worked to build power, take action, and create change to achieve freedom and justice for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) people and their families. As a progressive social justice organization, the Task Force works toward a society that values and respects the diversity of human expression and identity and achieves equity for all. Because LGBTQ and gender non-conforming people – especially LGBTQ/GNC people of color – face widespread systemic discrimination in employment, legal efforts to ensure that employees have access to collective action are a critical piece of our broader efforts to fight for economic justice.

The National Women's Law Center (NWLC) is a non-profit legal advocacy organization dedicated to the advancement and protection of women's rights and opportunities. Since 1972, NWLC has fought for equal opportunities and fair treatment for women in all aspects of their employment. This includes not only the right to a workplace that is free from all forms of discrimination and harassment, but also access to effective means of enforcing that right and remedying such conduct. NWLC has played a leading role in the passage and enforcement of federal civil rights laws, including through class action and pattern or practice litigation and in numerous amicus briefs involving sex and race discrimination in employment before the United States Supreme Court, federal courts of appeals, and state courts.

Letitia James is the Public Advocate for the City of New York – the second-highest ranking official in New York City government who serves as a citywide elected ombudsman, legislator, and litigator. Public Advocate James has advocated for stronger anti-discrimination legislation – including the introduction of legislation that prohibits New York City employers from asking job applicants about their salary histories. She has also filed amicus briefs in cases involving workplace discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and criminal records, and she has issued policy reports on the gender wage gap in New York City and other topics relevant to workplace discrimination.

Public Advocates, Inc. is a non-profit, public interest law firm and one of the oldest public interest law firms in the nation. Public Advocates uses diverse litigation and non-litigative strategies to handle exclusively policy and impact cases to challenge the persistent, underlying causes and effects of poverty and discrimination. Its work currently focuses on achieving equality in education, housing, and transportation; in the past the organization has addressed systemic harms in employment, prisons, consumer rights, welfare benefits and health care among other issue areas. Throughout its history, Public Advocates has consistently employed the class action mechanism to obtain relief on behalf of large numbers of individuals – sometimes having had classes certified with over a million members. As such, the organization has a strong interest in the continued effective functioning of the class action mechanism in all contexts.

Public Counsel is the largest pro bono law firm in the nation and the Southern California affiliate of the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law. Its 71 attorneys and 50 support staff – along with over 5,000 volunteer lawyers, law students, and legal professionals – assist more than 30,000 low-income individuals, families, and community organizations every year. Public Counsel addresses systemic poverty and civil rights issues through impact litigation, direct services, and policy advocacy. Our practice areas include veterans' rights, children's rights, community development, consumers' rights, immigrants' rights, and housing and homelessness.

The Public Interest Law Project (PILP) is a nonprofit state support center for local legal services and nonprofit public interest law programs in California. PILP focuses on the areas of affordable housing and public benefits, including the areas of food, health care and income support. In all of those areas many of our clients are frequently employed at workplaces where concerted activity and collective legal action are often necessary to protect their civil and economics right and to assist with efforts to lift them out of poverty.

Public Justice is a nonprofit legal organization that participates in high-impact litigation throughout the United States on behalf of low-wage workers, consumers, and others whose civil rights have been violated. Public Justice's Class Action Preservation Project conducts research and comments on developments in the law with the goal of ensuring that those with relatively little societal power retain access to the civil justice system and are able to join together to vindicate their rights.

The Public Justice Center (PJC), is a nonprofit civil rights and anti-poverty legal services organization founded in 1985 and based in Baltimore, Maryland. The PJC has a longstanding commitment to protecting the rights of low- and moderate-income workers, consumers, and renters, among others, and routinely vindicates those rights through representation in class actions, including cases challenging discriminatory and unlawful labor practices.

Located in Montgomery, Alabama, Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) has provided pro bono representation to vulnerable populations in the Southeast since 1971. SPLC has litigated or served as amicus curiae in numerous cases to vindicate the rights of low wage workers, including several class actions challenging employment discrimination, retaliation, and human trafficking. SPLC has an interest in this case because a ruling upholding class action waivers in employment agreements would adversely impact SPLC's future clients.
