DEFENDANTS’ MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6)

Defendants bring this Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs’ Complaint for the following reasons:

1. Plaintiffs, three students of the Williamston Community School District and five parents of District students, have filed suit against the District and seven Board of Education members regarding the District’s adoption of certain School Board policies. Doc. 1, PgID 1-34; Doc 1-1, PgID 35-63.

2. Plaintiffs have not alleged a specific injury, or a discrete incident in connection with the policies. Rather, Plaintiffs' damage claim is hypothetical, as they anticipate that their rights may be violated in the future.
3. The challenged policies protect all students from discrimination and bullying. Because the District's policies attempt to protect all students, Plaintiffs allege that the district is "promoting" a particular lifestyle. The suggestion is false.
4. Defendants move to dismiss for the following reasons: 1. Plaintiffs have not suffered an injury in fact, therefore they do not have a justiciable claim; 2. The policies are viewpoint neutral and related to a reasonable policy goal, and as a result, do not violate Plaintiffs' First Amendment Rights; 3. Plaintiffs have not identified "fundamental rights" that have been "substantially interfered with" as a result of "shocking" governmental action; 4. Plaintiffs have not alleged a violation of Title IX, since the statute does not specifically address transgendered students; 5. The District is required by the Michigan School Code to address bullying by school policy; and 6. The individual defendants are entitled to qualified immunity.
5. Defendants seek dismissal of this matter pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) provides for the dismissal of a case where the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.
6. When a Court is presented with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "it may consider the [c]omplaint and any exhibits attached thereto, public records, items appearing in the record of the case and exhibits attached to the defendant's motion [for judgment on the pleadings], so long as they are referred to in the [c]omplaint and are central to the claims contained therein." Bassett v Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 528 F3d 426, 430 (6th Ci. 2008). The Court must construe these documents "in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all factual allegations as true," and determine whether the plaintiff has alleged "enough factual matter" to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Cline v Rogers, 87 F3d 176, 179 (6th Cir 1996); Bell Atl Corp v Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, (2007). The Court, however, "need not accept as true legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences" in the plaintiff's complaint. Gregory v Shelby County, 220 F.3d 433, 446 (6th Cir 2000).

7. Defendants request that this Court grant their Motion to Dismiss for the above stated reasons, and those stated in the attached brief in support.

WHEREFORE Defendants request that this Court grant their Motion to Dismiss for the above stated reasons, and those stated in the attached brief in support.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT
TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6)

CONCISE STATEMENT OF REASONS IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS' POSITION

Defendants move to dismiss for the following reasons:

1. Plaintiffs have not suffered an injury-in-fact, and instead only claim that there is potential for a hypothetical injury that may never occur. Therefore, Plaintiffs do not have a justiciable claim.
2. The policies are viewpoint neutral and related to a reasonable policy goal, and as a result, do not violate Plaintiffs' First Amendment Rights.
3. The District's anti-bullying and anti-harassment policies that prohibit harassment and bullying that could cause a substantial disruption of school activities are coextensive with First Amendment rights.
4. Plaintiffs have not identified "fundamental rights" that have been "substantially interfered with" as a result of "shocking" governmental action.
5. The District's policies do not violate Procedural Due Process rights because the terms Plaintiffs claim are ambiguous are held by Courts in this Circuit to be sufficiently defined.
6. Plaintiffs have not alleged a violation of Title IX or the Elliott Larsen Civil Rights Act, since Plaintiffs have not identified a specific actual injury that occurred.
7. The District is required by the Michigan School Code to address bullying by school policy.
8. The individual Defendants are entitled to qualified immunity.

MOST CONTROLLING AUTHORITY

No Justiciable Claim

Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992): for a cause of action to be actionable, “the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual and imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.”

Miller v. City of Wickliffe, 852 F.3d 497, 503 (6th Cir. 2017): Plaintiffs “lack an injury in fact because the [policies] have not yet been applied to them. Their injury is conjectural and hypothetical, rather than concrete and particularized.”

First Amendment

Bethel School Dist. No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. 675, 266 (1986). “First Amendment rights of students in the public school ‘are not automatically coextensive with the rights of adults in other settings.’”

M.A.L. v. Kinsland, 543 F.3d 841 (6th Cir 2008): public schools may “put time, place, and manner restrictions on hallway speech so long as the restrictions are viewpoint neutral and reasonable in light of the school's interest in the effectiveness of the forum's intended purpose.”

CLS v. Martinez, 561 U.S. 661, 688-689, 130 S.Ct. 2971, 177 L.Ed.2d 838 (2010): “A regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others.”

Tinker v. Des Moines Ind. Comm. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 73321 L.Ed.2d 731 (1969): the Supreme Court held that public schools possess authority to regulate student expression when speech “substantial[ly] disrupt[s]” school activities or “impinge[s] upon the rights of other students.”

Substantive Due Process Claims

Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374, 387 n.12, 98 S.Ct. 673, 54 L.Ed.2d 618 (1978): substantive due process claims require proof of “direct” and “substantial” interference with fundamental rights.

Procedural Due Process

Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 794, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989): “perfect clarity and precise guidance have never been required even of regulations that restrict expressive activity.”

Hyman v. City of Louisville, 132 F.Supp.2d 528, 545–47 (W.D.Ky.2001), (rev'd on other grounds, 53 Fed.Appx. 740 (6th Cir.2002). “[t]he definitions of ‘sexual orientation’ ... are consistent with the meanings attributed to those terms by common usage,” namely heterosexuality, homosexuality, and bisexuality.

Title IX

Davis v. Monroe Co. Board of Ed., 526 U.S. 629, 650, 119 S.Ct. 1661 (1999): Title IX discrimination claims require proof of an actual discrimination.

Elliott Larsen Civil Rights Act

Corley v Detroit Bd of Educ, 470 Mich 274 (2004): Claims brought under the ELCRA require a discrete form of sexual discrimination based only on sex, not gender.

Qualified Immunity

Mullenix v. Luna, 136 S. Ct. 305, 313, 193 L. Ed. 2d 255 (2015): In passing on a given qualified immunity defense, the Court must determine: 1. Whether “the facts alleged show the officer's conduct violated a constitutional right”; and 2. Whether that right was “clearly established.”

FACTS

On October 2, 2017 and November 6, 2017, the Williamston Community School District Board of Education adopted multiple policies filed as Doc 1- PageID 35-63. On January 16, 2018, Plaintiffs filed suit relating to the content of the policies. Plaintiffs generally claimed that the policies could infringe upon their constitutional rights, and could constitute discrimination under multiple federal and state statutes.

Plaintiffs, however, have not alleged any specific injury or harm as a result of the policies. Plaintiffs have not alleged that they were discriminated against by identifying a discrete act. Plaintiffs, in other words, have not identified any incidents where one or more Plaintiffs were punished for violating the policy, or denied an opportunity provided by the District because of its enforcement of its policies. Rather, Plaintiffs only contend hypothetical injury that has not, and may not ever occur.

In crafting their argument, Plaintiffs have distorted and misstated the content of the policies. In truth, citing to multiple state and federal laws, the policies Plaintiffs attack seek to shield all students from discrimination, including that based on sexual orientation and religion. The Policies do not single out one particular group of students. In relevant part, these policies state the following:

Policy 4900 Fair Employment Clause states that it is “the intent of the Board” to award contracts in excess of $15,000 to qualified contractors who do not “discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of age, sex, race, color, religion, creed, age, physical handicap, ancestry, national origin, sexual orientation, height, weight, or marital status.” Doc 1-1, PgID 36.

Policy 7500 Guidance Program, states that “guidance and counseling services shall be available to any student and shall not discriminate against any student on the basis of sex, race, age, color, national origin, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, or disability.” Id. at PgID 38.

Policy 8010 Equal Education Opportunity, provides that “[e]very child, regardless of race, creed, color, sex, national origin, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, cultural or economic background, or handicap, is entitled to equal opportunity for education development.” Id. at PgID 40.

Policy 8011 Gender Identity states that the District “fosters an educational environment for all students that is safe, welcoming and free from stigma and discrimination.” The policy already states it applies to all students, and it clarifies that the safe environment shall be provided regardless of sex, social orientation, gender identity, or gender expression. The policy then continues that the district will accept the gender identity that each student asserts based on the student’s legitimately held belief, and that the district will customize support to allow the student equal access to the district’s educational programs and activities. The policy concludes by acknowledging that parents of transgendered students are key determinants of their health, counseling and support services could be provided, and the district will keep the parents informed. Id. at PgID 42.

8040 School Admissions relates to the admissions of first time, resident, new resident, and nonresident students. As for nonresident students, the policy reads that those students shall not be “granted or refused enrollment based upon disability, religion, race, color, national origin, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, sex, height, or weight, or generally, in violation of any state or federal law prohibiting discrimination.” Id. at PgID 44-45.

8026-R Bullying identifies, with specificity, what constitutes bullying, aggressive behavior, intimidation and menacing behavior, and harassment. The Policy further states that bullying is conduct that has “an actual and substantial detrimental effect on a student’s physical or mental health,” and causes “substantial disruption in, or substantial interference with, the orderly operation of the school.” The policy then provides a definition for harassment, and identifies that it could be based on certain characteristics. The policy states that “[h]arassment’ includes, but is not limited to, any act which subjects an individual or group to unwanted, abusive behavior of a nonverbal, verbal, written or physical nature, often on the basis of age, race, religion, color, national origin, marital status or disability, but may also include sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, physical characteristics (e.g., height, weight, complexion), cultural background, socioeconomic status, or geographic location (e.g., from the rival school, different state, rural area, city, etc.).” Id. at PgID 47-48.

8720 Student Organizations allows students to form clubs and other organized groups outside the regular classroom environment. The policy continues that such meetings “[s]hall be open to all students without regard to race, creed, color, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, handicap, religion, or national origin.”

Id. at PgID 50.

Even a cursory review of the policies reveals that they do not effectuate the inflammatory results that Plaintiffs claim. The policies do not facially state that bathrooms and locker rooms will be shared by males and females. Not one of these policies compels Plaintiffs, or anyone, to express a belief or statement. And the words “affirm” and “promote” are not in the language of the policies.

LAW AND ARGUMENT

I. PLAINTIFFS’ CLAIMS SHOULD BE DISMISSED BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT JUSTICIABLE. THERE IS NO ACTUAL INJURY IN CONTROVERSY

Plaintiffs' claims regarding the District's policies should be dismissed because they are nonjusticiable. Plaintiffs “lack an injury in fact because the [policies] have not yet been applied to them. Their injury is conjectural and hypothetical, rather than concrete and particularized.”<sup>1</sup> Miller v. City of Wickliffe, 852 F.3d 497, 503 (6th Cir. 2017).

<sup>1</sup> Several of Plaintiffs' causes of action are particularly deficient in this regard. Plaintiff's Count VII alleging a violation of the Michigan Constitution based on an alleged violation of FAPE (free appropriate public education) should be dismissed because Plaintiffs have not alleged a specific discrete act violating rights. Rather, Plaintiffs alleged they removed their children from school in anticipation of an alleged violation caused by the district's policies. This cannot form the basis of a claim as it is well-established that plaintiffs cannot create their own cause of action. See e.g., Polera v. Board of Ed. Of Newburgh, 288 F.3d 478, 490 (2nd Cir. 2002)(holding that plaintiffs cannot argue administrative procedures are futile by sitting on their claims until administrative procedures can no longer work.); Fry v. Napoleon Community Schools, 788 F.3d 622 (6th Cir. 2015), vacated on other grounds. Additionally, § 1983 liability attaches to a municipality only when the execution of its “policy or custom, whether made by its lawmakers or by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy,” inflicts the injury upon the plaintiff. Monell v. Dep't of Soc. Servs. of the City of New York, Article III, Section 2 of the United States Constitution confines the jurisdiction of the federal courts to actual cases and controversies. U.S. Const. Art. III § 2, cl. 1; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Obusek, 72 F.3d 1148, 1153 (3d Cir.1995). Pursuant to this provision, the federal courts are prohibited from issuing advisory opinions. Rbone–Poulenc Surfants & Specialties, L.P. v. I.R.S., 249 F.3d 175, 181–82 (3d Cir.2001). Not only does the “case or controversy” language in Article III require that a case be live, it also “prohibits all advisory opinions, not just some advisory opinions and not just advisory opinions that hold little interest to the parties or the public.” Fialka–Feldman v. Oakland Univ. Bd. of Trustees, 639 F.3d 711, 715 (6th Cir. 2011). Indeed, “[t]he oldest and most consistent thread in the federal law of justiciability is that federal courts will not give advisory opinions,” Coffin v. Malvern Fed. Sav. Bank, 90 F.3d 851, 853 (3d Cir.1996), and that they must refrain from “decid[ing] abstract, hypothetical or contingent questions.” Alabama State Fed. of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 461, 65 S.Ct. 1384, 89 L.Ed. 1725 (1945).

Closely related to the prohibition on the issuance of advisory opinions is the ripeness doctrine. Like the prohibition on advisory opinions, the ripeness doctrine prevents courts from “entangling themselves in abstract disagreements” through abstention from making premature adjudication. Abbott Lab. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967), overturned on other grounds. One of the basic principles governing whether a justiciable controversy exists is that the rendering

436 U.S. 658, 694, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 98 S. Ct. 2018 (1978). There is no injury-in-fact in this case, as the District’s policies have not been enforced against any of the Plaintiffs.

of an opinion must be conclusive of an issue. See Step-Saver Data Sys. v. Wyse Technology, 912 F.2d 643 (3d Cir.1990). Essential to the conclusiveness inquiry is whether the Court has been “presented with a set of facts from which it can make findings.” Travelers, 72 F.3d at 1155. Absent the necessary facts, the Court is unable to engage in its required fact-finding role, and is instead left to render only an advisory opinion. Id.

In this case, there are no facts upon which to conclude Plaintiff’s Constitutional or statutory rights were violated. Instead, Plaintiffs’ lawsuit only complains of the language of new School District Policies that have not interfered with their education. Plaintiffs present at best a theoretical claim that their rights could eventually be violated, but a federal court has “no power to offer an advisory opinion, based on hypothetical facts.” Comm. Exp. Co. v. Detroit Int’l Bridge Co., 695 F.3d 518, 525 (6th Cir. 2012).

Students and Parents for Privacy v. U.S. Department of Ed., et. al., 2017 WL 6629520 (N.D. IL. 2017),<sup>2</sup> illustrates the fact that the District’s policies may never result in an actionable injury. In Students and Parents for Privacy, the Illinois District Court was confronted with a similar challenge to a school district’s policies. There, the court found that the plaintiff’s rights were not violated by the district’s policies, and highlighted the fact that the plaintiff’s concerns were speculative at best. In addressing the plaintiff’s concerns that the school’s policies specifically allowing transgender students access to facilities corresponding to their gender identity, the court found that the policies may not lead to a violation of the plaintiff's claimed privacy rights. The policies did not expressly force invasions of privacy. Further, the restrooms had stalls, which provided adequate privacy, and single-use facilities were available to students. The Court continued by acknowledging that "[a] transgender student's presence in the restroom provides no more of a risk to other students' privacy rights than the presence of an overly curious student of the same biological sex who decides to sneak glances at his or her classmates performing bodily functions. Or for that matter, any other student who uses the bathroom at the same time. Common sense tells us that the communal restroom is a place where individuals act in a discreet manner to protect their privacy and those who have true privacy concerns are able to utilize a stall." Id. Similarly, in this case, Plaintiffs have not identified a specific injury that occurred, and their anticipated "damages" may never occur. As a result, Plaintiffs' lawsuit should be dismissed.

II. EVEN IF PLAINTIFFS HAD ALLEGED A PARTICULAR INJURY, THEY HAVE NOT PLEAD VIOLATIONS OF THE LAW.

1. The Policies Do Not Violate Plaintiffs' First Amendment Rights.

A. These Policies Are Viewpoint Neutral And Serve A Reasonable Purpose.

"First Amendment rights ... must be analyzed in light of the special characteristics of the school environment." CLS v. Martinez, 561 U.S. 661, 685-686, 130 S.Ct. 2971, 177 L.Ed.2d 838 (2010). Because of this unique setting, "First Amendment rights of students in the public school 'are not automatically coextensive with the rights of adults in other settings.'" Bethel School Dist. No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. 675, 266 (1986).

As a result, it is well established that public schools may “put time, place, and manner restrictions on hallway speech so long as the restrictions are viewpoint neutral and reasonable in light of the school's interest in the effectiveness of the forum's intended purpose.” M.A.L. v. Kinsland, 543 F.3d 841 (6th Cir 2008).

The District’s policies are intended to promote equality and tolerance. The Supreme Court has established that policies aimed at promoting equality reasonably serve a public school’s interest in providing an education to all, and are therefore reasonable purposes for a policy at a school district. CLS v. Martinez, 561 U.S. 661, 688-689, 130 S.Ct. 2971, 177 L.Ed.2d 838 (2010). Likewise, school policies aimed at encouraging tolerance, cooperation, and learning among students are reasonable policy goals. Id. The question then becomes whether the policy is content neutral.

“Whether a statute is content-based may be determined from the text of the statute itself: ‘if the statute describes speech by content, then it is content based.’” Pickup v. Brown, 42 F.supp.3d 1347, 1357 99th Cir. 2012). Aside from the anti-harassment policy, the policies in this case do not mention speech or content. Rather, the policies are non-discrimination policies—described as “all comers” policies by the Supreme Court. See CLS, 561 U.S. at 695.

A content neutral policy is not rendered unconstitutional as viewpoint discrimination merely because it has an incidental impact on a particular group. CLS, 561 U.S. at 695. “A regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others.” Ward v. Rock, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). “Even if a regulation has a differential impact on groups wishing to enforce exclusionary membership policies, ‘[w]here the [State] does not target conduct on the basis of its expressive content, acts are not shielded from regulation merely because they express a discriminatory idea or philosophy.’” CLS, 561 U.S. at 696.

The Supreme Court in Christian Legal Services v. Martinez, supra, recently examined a non-discrimination policy nearly identical to those challenged here, and found it to be content neutral, and constitutional. Nearly identical to the challenged language in this case, the school’s Policy on Nondiscrimination (Nondiscrimination Policy), stated:

“[Hastings] is committed to a policy against legally impermissible, arbitrary or unreasonable discriminatory practices. All groups, including administration, faculty, student governments, [Hastings]-owned student residence facilities and programs sponsored by [Hastings], are governed by this policy of nondiscrimination. [Hastings]’s policy on nondiscrimination is to comply fully with applicable law. . . [Hastings] shall not discriminate unlawfully on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, ancestry, disability, age, sex or sexual orientation. This nondiscrimination policy covers admission, access and treatment in Hastings-sponsored programs and activities.” Id., at 220.

Like Plaintiffs in the instant matter, the CLS plaintiffs complained that the policy violated their religious beliefs regarding homosexuality, and their right to free speech.

The Court found that the policy was viewpoint neutral on its face, and did not violate constitutional rights, noting, “[i]t is, after all, hard to imagine a more viewpoint-neutral policy than one requiring all student groups to accept all comers.” 561 U.S. at 695. The Court found that based on its face, the policy draws no distinction between groups based on their message or perspective; its requirement that all student groups accept all comers is textbook viewpoint neutral. Id. Still, the plaintiffs asserted that it systematically—and impermissibly—burdened most heavily those groups whose viewpoints are out of favor with the campus mainstream. The Court found that this argument fails because “[a] regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others.” Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661. Based on the school’s requirement that student organizations accept all comers, the Court was satisfied that Hastings’ policy was “justified without reference to the content [or viewpoint] of the regulated speech.” Id., at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746. It targets the act of rejecting would-be group members without reference to the reasons motivating that behavior. Id. at 695-696. Similarly, the Policies in this case draw no distinction based on groups and applies to protect all students. As the Supreme Court stated, it is “hard to imagine a more viewpoint-neutral policy than one requiring all student groups to accept all.”<sup>3</sup> CLS, 561 U.S. at 695.

B. Limiting Speech Content In A School Setting Is Constitutional Under Certain Circumstances.

Even if the policies are construed to limit content, that alone does not render the policies unconstitutional. In Tinker v. Des Moines Ind. Comm. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 73321 L.Ed.2d 731 (1969), the Supreme Court held that public schools possess authority to regulate student expression when speech “substantial[ly] disrupt[s]” school activities or “impinge[s] upon the rights of other students.” Tinker, 393 U.S. at 514, 89 S.Ct. at 740. Since Tinker, the Supreme Court has carved out a number of additional categories of speech that a school may restrict, even without the threat of a substantial disruption. In Bethel Sch. Dist. No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. 675, 106 S.Ct. 3159, 92 L.Ed.2d 549 (1986), the Supreme Court held that “there is no First Amendment protection for ‘lewd,’ ‘vulgar,’ ‘indecent,’ and ‘plainly offensive’ speech in school.” Fraser, 478 U.S. at 685, 106 S.Ct. 3159. Fraser permits a school to prohibit words that “offend for the same reasons that obscenity offend.” Id. In Hazelwood Sch. Dist. v. Kuhlmeier, 484 U.S. 260, 108 S.Ct. 562, 98 L.Ed.2d 592 (1988), the Court found that a school may regulate school-sponsored speech (that is, speech that a reasonable observer would view as the school's own speech) on the basis of any legitimate pedagogical concern. “Speech falling outside of these categories is subject to Tinker's general rule: it may be regulated ... if it would substantially disrupt school operations or interfere with the right of others.”

<sup>3</sup> For this reason, Plaintiffs’ Count II regarding the Matt Epling Safe School Law should be dismissed. By its plain language, the District’s policies apply to protect all students regardless of classification.

The only referenced policy that may arguably limit speech in any way protects all students from certain forms of harassment and bullying that would violate state and federal law. School anti-bullying policies highlight “the very real tension between anti-harassment laws and the Constitution's guarantee of freedom of speech.” Zamecnik v. Indian Prairie Sch. Dist., 636 F.3d 874, 877 (7th Cir. 2011). Indeed, as a condition to receive federal funding, public school districts are required by Title VI and Title IX to respond to harassment of students in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent.

Courts have relied upon the existence and enforcement of thorough policies prohibiting harassment to make this determination.

In spite of this tension, student speech may be regulated if it comports with Tinker. Thus, anti-bullying policies are constitutionally permissible when they focus on preventing either substantial disruption of school activities or interference with the rights of other students. School policies may even ban harassing speech in anticipation of disruption, even if disruptive events have not yet occurred, because “Tinker does not require certainty, only that the forecast of substantial disruption be reasonable.” Lowery v. Euverard, 497 F.3d 584, 592 (6th Cir.2007).

In Glowacki v. Howell Public School Dist., 2013 WL 3148272 (E.D. MI. 2013), the Eastern District of Michigan addressed a nearby district’s anti-bullying policy that restricted the content of speech, and found that it passed Constitutional muster. The Court found that the limitation on speech contained in the policy was valid because it defined bullying in terms that mirror the threshold which Tinker held that student speech may be restricted. Id. at 14. The policy prohibits conduct that is likely to cause substantial disruption or interfere with the rights of other students. Id. the policy, on its face, does not prevent students from expressing opinions that may be unpopular or offensive. Id. Finally, the policy targets all bullying by all students; it did not only target certain students. The Court went on to call the plaintiff’s challenge of the policy “both legally and factually frivolous.” Id. at 14.

The bullying policy in this case is equally valid. The Williamston policy likewise prohibits conduct that is likely to cause substantial disruption or interfere with the rights of other students. Policy 8020-R (bullying is conduct...causes “substantial disruption in, or substantial interference with, the orderly operation of the school.”). It also protects all students, not just conduct based on sexual orientation or gender identity.

C. The Policies Do Not Infringe On Religious Freedom.

Plaintiffs also claim that the District’s policies violated their right to the free exercise of religion. “[T]he threshold questions in analyzing a law challenged under the Free Exercise Clause are (1) is the law neutral, and (2) is the law of general applicability?” First Assembly of God of Naples, Florida, Inc. v. Collier Cnty., Fla., 20 F.3d 419, 423 (11th Cir.1994). The neutrality inquiry asks whether “the object of a law is to infringe upon or restrict practices because of their religious motivation.” Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 533, 113 S.Ct. 2217, 124 L.Ed.2d 472 (1993). The general applicability prong asks whether the government has “in a selective manner impose[d] burdens only on conduct motivated by religious belief.” *880 Id. at 543, 113 S.Ct. 2217. “[A] law that is neutral and of general applicability need not be justified by a compelling governmental interest even if the law has the incidental effect of burdening a particular religious practice.” Id. at 531, 113 S.Ct. 2217. Rather, it needs only to survive rational basis review, see Combs v. Homer–Center School Dist., 540 F.3d 231, 242–43 (3d Cir.2008), under which it is presumed constitutional and the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that it is not rationally related to a legitimate government interest, Deen v.

Egleston, 597 F.3d 1223, 1230–31 (11th Cir.2010). For the reasons stated above, the policies are viewpoint neutral, reasonably satisfy a legitimate governmental interest, which is to promote tolerance. The policies do not violate religious freedom principles.

Plaintiffs may argue that these policies impact their religious beliefs regarding homosexuality, but “some” impact is not enough to label a law or policy as unconstitutional. See R.A.V., 505 U.S. at 390 (“Even if a regulation has a differential impact on groups wishing to enforce exclusionary membership policies, [w]here the [State] does not target conduct on the basis of its expressive content, acts are not shielded from regulation merely because they express a discriminatory idea or philosophy.”) Courts have repeatedly found laws that prohibit bigamy and polygamy valid, though they have an impact on religious beliefs. See e.g., Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 166–67, 25 L.Ed. 244 (1878); Adgeb v. Oklahoma, 434 Fed. Appx. 746, 747 (10th Cir. 2011); Potter v. Murray City, 760 F.2d 1065, 1069–70 (10th Cir.1985).

2. Plaintiff’s Count III Substantive Due Process Claims Fail.

Substantive due process rights guard against the government’s arbitrary exercise of power without reasonable justification. Cnty. of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 845-46 (1998). These claims are examined under a two-part analysis. First, a plaintiff must establish that she has been deprived of a life, liberty, or property interest sufficient to trigger the protections of the Due Process Clause in the first place. Only after identifying such a right does a court consider whether the government’s deprivation of that right “shocks the conscience.” Id. Here, Plaintiffs fail to allege the violation of any right sufficient to trigger the protections of the Due Process Clause, nor do they allege any conscience-shocking behavior that would support a substantive due process claim.

A. Plaintiffs Do Not Allege The Deprivation Of A Fundamental Right.

A fundamental constitutional right protected by the Due Process Clause is one that is “objectively, deeply rooted in this Nation’s history and tradition” and “implicit in the concept of ordered liberty.” Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720-21 (1997). The Supreme Court has mandated extreme caution in elevating individual liberty interests to the status of fundamental constitutional rights because recognizing such rights, “to a great extent, places the matter outside the arena of public debate and legislative action” and risks transforming the Due Process Clause “into the policy preferences of the Members of the Court.” Id. In determining whether a claimed right is fundamental, courts first require a “careful description” of the asserted interest. Christensen v. Cnty. of Boone, 483 F.3d 454, 462 (7th Cir. 2007). “[V]ague generalities . . . will not suffice.” Chavez v. Martinez, 538 U.S. 760, 776 (2003). This requirement prevents “the reviewing court from venturing into vaster constitutional vistas than are called for by the facts of the case at hand.” Williams v. Att’y Gen. of Ala., 378 F.3d 1232, 1240 (11th Cir. 2004). Next, a reviewing court must determine whether that asserted interest is “fundamental” — that is, whether “it is so deeply rooted and sacrosanct that no amount of process would justify its deprivation.” Christensen, 483 F.3d at 462. Once a court is satisfied that a fundamental right is at stake, it must then “determine whether the government has interfered ‘directly’ and ‘substantially’ with the Plaintiffs’ exercise of that right.” Id. (quoting Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374, 386-87 (1978)).

Here, Plaintiffs’ factual allegations do not implicate any fundamental right protected by the Due Process Clause. Plaintiff’s first generally claim that Defendants have infringed upon the parent “Plaintiffs’ fundamental parental rights” to control and direct their child’s upbringing and health decisions. Comp. ¶ 72. Plaintiffs next assert that Defendants have violated students’ right to “privacy, personal identity and personal autonomy.” Compl. ¶ 82. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants policies impinge on students’ rights to participate in extracurricular activities and athletics, ¶ 86, and use the showers, lockers rooms, bathrooms and other facilities ¶ 85.

It is well established that some of Plaintiffs’ claims are not of fundamental rights. For example, “[i]t is well-established that students do not have a general constitutional right to participate in extracurricular athletics.” Lowery v. Euwerard, 497 F.3d 584, 588 (6th Cir. 2007). Plaintiffs have also plainly misstated facts about the content of the District’s policies in order to create an alleged violation. In support of their claim that the parents’ alleged fundamental right to direct the upbringing of their children has been impaired, in ¶ 72, Plaintiffs state that “Policy 8011, gives the school district unilateral authority to decide what is in the best interest of a child and the authority to refuse to notify a parent of the assertion of any gender or sexual orientation choice purportedly made by their child at school.” That claim is false and stands in direct contradiction to the plain language of the policy. The policy states the exact opposite: “Parental and family support are key determinants of transgender and nonconforming student health. . . . School officials must consider the health, safety, and well-being of the student, as well as the responsibility to keep parents informed.” See Policy 8011.

To be sure, courts have recognized that individuals may have privacy interests in the exposure of their unclothed bodies, but the scope of this interest is not limitless and does not include the situation where, as here, the individuals are not forced to expose their naked bodies and are, at most, at risk of incidental viewing if they decide not to use the alternative changing facilities made available to them. Instead, students choose whether to undress in a locker room or in an alternative changing facility. Plaintiffs’ description of the “right to privacy” fails to narrowly and accurately define the interest that they actually seek to vindicate, which is an alleged right to change in a locker room from which transgender female students are excluded. There is, however, no such fundamental right, and Plaintiffs cannot merely use the word “privacy” and then automatically invoke the protections of the Due Process Clause. See, e.g., Moran v. Beyer, 734 F.2d 1245, 1246 (7th Cir. 1984) (explaining that “not every choice made in the context of marriage implicates the privacy and family interests . . . that the decision itself accedes to the status of a fundamental right”); Dronenburg v. Zech, 741 F.2d 1388, 1397 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (explaining that lower courts should not expand privacy rights that have not been clearly recognized by the Supreme Court).

Even if the policies somehow implicated Plaintiffs' fundamental privacy rights, their substantive due process claim would fail because the Defendants have not interfered "directly" and "substantially" with those rights. See Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374, 387 n.12, 98 S.Ct. 673, 54 L.Ed.2d 618 (1978); Montgomery v. Carr, 101 F.3d 1171, 1124 (6th Cir. 1996). Courts have made clear that incidental effects on fundamental rights are not cognizable pursuant to the Due Process Clause. Christensen, 483 F.3d at 463 ("The Constitution prevents fundamental rights from being aimed at; it does not, however, prevent side effects that may occur if the government is aiming at some other objective."). For example, in Hameetman v. City of Chicago, 776 F.2d 636, 643 (7th Cir. 1985), the court concluded that regulations designed to keep undocumented immigrants out of the country that had the indirect effect of separating parents from children "do not bring the constitutional rights of family association into play" because these effects are mere "collateral consequences of regulations not directed at the family." The court explained that "regulations are not unconstitutional deprivations of the right of family association unless they regulate the family directly." Id.

The same conclusion is warranted here, where Plaintiffs fail to plausibly allege how the District's policies "directly and substantially" infringed their rights to privacy. Instead, Plaintiffs can complain only of the policies indirect effects, such as potentially requiring students who want additional privacy to use alternative restroom and changing facilities at their option. These indirect effects most assuredly do not reach the level of a constitutional deprivation. To hold otherwise would mean that every inconvenience related to restroom and locker room usage would “carry the seed of a constitutional claim, and thus would improperly open [b]reathtaking vistas of liability.” Walls v. Lombard Police Officers, 2002 WL 548675, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 4, 2002) (quoting Hameetman, 776 F.2d at 643).

In short, Plaintiffs have entirely failed to plausibly allege that any fundamental rights to privacy have been substantially impaired. Accordingly, the rational basis test governs this Court’s review of the Agreement and Guidance. See Glucksberg, 521 U.S. at 728. Under this test, the Court must simply ask if the government action bears “a reasonable relation to a legitimate state interest.” Id. at 722. As stated above, the policies easily meet this standard. And even if the Court were to evaluate the Defendants’ actions under the higher standard used to analyze substantial burdens on fundamental rights, Plaintiffs’ claim would fail.

C. The School’s Action Does Not Shock the Conscience.

As noted above, if a court finds that an individual’s fundamental rights have been impaired, it then must ask “whether the governmental action can find ‘reasonable justification in the service of a legitimate governmental objective,’ or if instead it more properly is ‘characterized as arbitrary, or conscience shocking, in a constitutional sense.’” Christensen, 483 F.3d at 462. Conduct that “shocks the conscience” includes deliberate government action that is “arbitrary” and “unrestrained by the established principles of private right and distributive justice.” Maglaya v. Kumiga, 2015 WL 4624884, at *7 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 3, 2015) (quoting Lewis, 523 U.S. at 846).

Here, far from being egregious or “conscience-shocking,” the Defendants’ actions serve the important government interests in protecting the right of all students to receive an education in an environment free from discrimination.

In considering whether these measures “shock the conscience,” it is of central importance that this case arises in the context of a school. As the Supreme Court has explained, “Fourth Amendment rights, no less than First and Fourteenth Amendment rights, are different in public schools than elsewhere; the ‘reasonableness’ inquiry cannot disregard the schools’ custodial and tutelary responsibility for children.” Vernonia Sch. Dist. 47J v. Acton, 515 U.S. 646, 656 (1995). In Vernonia School District, the Court upheld a school’s policy of requiring students participating in interscholastic athletics to submit to random drug testing against a Fourth Amendment challenge. In upholding the policy, the Court emphasized the diminished privacy interests of students in public schools: “Central, in our view, to the present case is the fact that the subjects of the Policy are (1) children, who (2) have been committed to the temporary custody of the State as schoolmaster.” 515 U.S. at 654. The Court noted that minors do not have the same rights as adults, explaining that they “lack some of the most fundamental rights of self-determination — including even the right of liberty in its narrow sense, i.e., the right to come and go at will.” Id.; see also id. at 657 (“Public school locker rooms . . . are not notable for the privacy they afford.”). These precepts should guide the Court’s inquiry here and make plain that, particularly when viewed in context,

Defendants' efforts to protect the dignity of all students and promote a learning environment free from discrimination cannot be said to "shock the conscience."

3. The Williamston Policies Are Sufficiently Definite To Satisfy Due Process Requirements.

Plaintiffs also claim that the policies are unconstitutionally vague because they do not define terms like sexual orientation, gender identity, harassment, and bullying. First, Plaintiff's assertion is wrong. Harassment and bullying are both defined under Policy 8260 – R: Bullying, in extensive detail. See policy page 2. Moreover, courts from this Circuit have already found that the remaining terms are sufficiently definitive to satisfy due process requirements. See Hyman v. City of Louisville, 132 F.Supp.2d 528, 545–47 (W.D.Ky.2001)

Due process demands that any statutory proscription be sufficiently precise "to provide people of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to understand what conduct it prohibits." Hill v. Colorado, 530 U.S. 703, 732, 120 S.Ct. 2480, 147 L.Ed.2d 597 (2000). However, "perfect clarity and precise guidance have never been required even of regulations that restrict expressive activity." Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 794, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). Facial invalidation for vagueness "is, manifestly, strong medicine that has been employed by the [Supreme] Court sparingly and only as a last resort." California Teachers Ass'n v. State Bd. of Educ., 271 F.3d 1141, 1155 (9th Cir.2001). When addressing a facial vagueness challenge, as here, the court "should uphold the challenge only if the enactment is impermissibly vague in all of its applications.” Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494–95, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 71 L.Ed.2d 362 (1982).

Relying on these principles, a District Court in this Circuit has determined the term “sexual orientation” is not unconstitutionally vague. See Hyman v. City of Louisville, 132 F.Supp.2d 528, 545–47 (W.D.Ky.2001) (relying on Black's dictionary definition, rejecting vagueness challenge to statute banning discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation), rev'd on other grounds, 53 Fed.Appx. 740 (6th Cir.2002). That court concluded, “[t]he definitions of ‘sexual orientation’ ... are consistent with the meanings attributed to those terms by common usage,” namely heterosexuality, homosexuality, and bisexuality. Id. Similarly, the District’s Policies use of this terminology in this case is likewise sufficiently definite to satisfy due process requirements.

4. Plaintiffs’ Title IX And ELCRA Claims Should Be Dismissed Because They Have Not Alleged An Actual Injury.

Title IX prohibits sex discrimination in education programs. Plaintiffs claim that the Williamston policies may violate Title IX because they can potentially limit athletic opportunities, by allowing transgender girls to participate on female sports teams. This hypothetical circumstance – which has not happened – does not violate Title IX because Plaintiffs have not alleged any actual injury. Rather, Plaintiffs’ Title IX claim speaks only to a purely hypothetical situation. The Supreme Court has made clear that

Title IX discrimination claims require proof of actual discrimination. See Davis v. Monroe Co. Board of Ed., 526 U.S. 629, 650, 119 S.Ct. 1661 (1999).<sup>4</sup>

Likewise, Plaintiffs' Elliott Larsen Civil Rights claim fails for not identifying a specific, discrete act of discrimination. Claims brought under the ELCRA require a discrete form of sexual discrimination based only on sex, not gender. Corley v Detroit Bd of Educ, 470 Mich 274 (2004)( the ELCRA requires allegations that "inherently" pertain to sex, not just gender.) Id at 279-80. Plaintiff has not alleged any such claim here.

5. Contrary To Plaintiff's Assertions, The District Can Adopt Its Policies.

The Michigan School Code vests in School Boards of Education the authority to adopt policies, including policies prohibiting bullying. See MCL 380.1310b. Moreover, the Michigan Department of Civil Rights has adopted model LGBT Non-Discrimination for Michigan municipalities to model their own ordinances and policies to provide protection for LGBT individuals. The District's Policies do not exceed the bounds of the MDCR recommendation.

Plaintiffs argue that Defendants do not have legal authority to approve these Policies because the state legislature had repeatedly rejected attempts to expand civil rights protections beyond biological sex. This argument fails, as it is well-established that the legislature "does not express its intent by a failure to legislate." Atkinson v. Inter-Am. Dev. Bank, 156 F.3d 1335, 1342 (D.C. Cir. 1998); see also Cent. Bank of Denver, N.A.

<sup>4</sup> Title IX claims against the individual Board members should be dismissed because there is no individual liability under Title IX. Romero v. City of New York, 839 F.Supp.2d 588, 617 (E.D. NY 2012).

v. First Interstate Bank, 511 U.S. 164, 187 (1994) (“[F]ailed legislative proposals are ‘a particularly dangerous ground on which to rest an interpretation of a prior statute.’”). “A bill can be proposed for any number of reasons, and it can be rejected for just as many others.” Solid Waste Agency v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng’rs, 531 U.S. 159, 170 (2001). Indeed, an amendment can be rejected for the simple reason that the state legislature believes the proposed change is not needed because its substance is already included in the statute. See Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. LTV Corp., 496 U.S. 633, 650 (1990) (“Congressional inaction lacks ‘persuasive significance’ because ‘several equally tenable inferences’ may be drawn from such inaction, ‘including the inference that the existing legislation already incorporated the offered change.’”). In any event, those legislative efforts did not address the question raised here — namely, how to determine the sex of a transgender student for purposes of access to school facilities or activities.

6. The Individual Defendants Are Entitled To Qualified Immunity.

The doctrine of qualified immunity shields officials from civil liability so long as their conduct does not violate “clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.” Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 231 (2009). A “clearly established” right is one that is “sufficiently clear that every reasonable official would have understood that what he is doing violates that right.” Reichle v Howards, 132 S. Ct. 2088, 2093 (2011). Ultimately, the doctrine is designed to protect “all but the plainly incompetent who knowingly violate the law.” Malley v. Briggs, 475 U.S. 335, 341 (1986). Qualified immunity is an absolute defense to § 1983 claims.

Binay v. Bettendorf, 601 F.3d 640, 647 (6th Cir. 2010). In passing on a given qualified immunity defense, the Court must determine: 1. Whether “the facts alleged show the officer's conduct violated a constitutional right”; and 2. Whether that right was “clearly established.” Mullenix v. Luna, 136 S. Ct. 305, 313, 193 L. Ed. 2d 255 (2015). Once a qualified immunity defense is raised, “the burden is on the plaintiff to demonstrate that the officials are not entitled to qualified immunity.” Binay, 601 F.3d at 647. Notably, these questions can be answered by the court as a matter of law. See Dickerson v. McClellan, 101 F.3d 1151, 1157 (6th Cir. 1996). In light of the voluminous case law set forth above, it cannot be argued that the inverse is “clearly established.” As such, the claim against the individuals should be summarily dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the above stated reasons, Defendants request that this Court grant their Motion to Dismiss and dismiss the Plaintiffs’ lawsuit in its entirety.
